Nineteen Year Trek Veteran Finally Comes in First

Story & Photos by Dan Davidson

Lyle Myers has been on every single annual run for the Trek Over the Top from Tok to Dawson City, but on March 8, he achieved another milestone. He was the first to arrive.

The Trek, now in its second year of being run by the Klondike Visitors Association, is basically a 200-mile poker run (one way) at what may be the tag end of winter, though it has suffered from terrible weather.

The vent began as a lark back in 1993, and formalized into a regular run which once occupied three weekends and averaged over 150 trekkers per weekend.

It has suffered somewhat due to America's military ventures (a lot of the trekkers were military at one time) and the economic downturn of the last several years, but the two weekends this year still attracted about 170 visitors, nothing to sneeze at during Dawson's slow winters.

The group, sponsored by the Alaska Trailblazers, left Tok at 9 a.m. Yukon Time and the first two sleds rolled up in front of the Visitors' Information Centre at about 2:30 p.m.

"The run was good," Meyers said. "It had some cold spots and some warm spots. We encountered some pretty good winds coming around Fairplay before we got to Chicken.

"On this side the trail was just great as it usually is. Cuts have been made so we could sail through some nasty areas without any trouble."

He said this run was a little slow - he has done the trip in about four hours.

Six more sleds pulled in while this interview was taking place. There were about 90 expected on this second weekend, with visitors taking rooms at the Eldorado, Downtown, Aurora and Bombay Peggy's.

Once here, the visitors are treated to a number of activities: a poker run, visits to the museum, shopping, curling at the Top of the World Curling Club, a Texas Hold'em Poker Tournament and other gambling at Diamond Tooth Gerties and banquets there on both Friday and Saturday nights.

As a special bonus for coming in first, Lyle Myers was presented with a free pass to next year's Trek, with the only condition being that he has to make the trip to collect it.

OPINIONS

Uffish Thoughts: Sometimes Those Phone Calls are From the Conservative Party

by Dan Davidson

I had a call from the Conservative Party of Canada a fortnight ago. Well, it wasn't actually from the party. It wasn't a "robo-call" either; there was an actual person on the line. It wasn't a long call. She thanked me for my time and signed off as soon as I told her that, no, I wasn't a fan of Mr. Harper's merry band.

It's not the first such call I have had. There have been at least a couple of others over the last four years.

I wondered, later, whether I should have told her as much as I did. Now I'm in some ReformaTory database and could be the target of a misleadingtelephonemessage a few years down the line.

As luck would have it, the Klondike riding always has its polling place in the Yukon Order of Pioneers Hall, so it would be hard to mislead anyone.

I've been listening to the news and the chattering pundits about this tale of electoral skullduggery and can understand why it's so easy to assume the Harperites might have done this. After all, they were the ones who broke the rules related to campaign spending in the previous election, using an "In/Out" ploy to allow themselves to spend more on campaigns than was legal.

In that case we know for certain they did it because they plead guilty and paid a small fine for their sins. Unfortunately none of the MPs or Senators involved were required to resign or serve time.

That was considered a kind of misdemeanor by Elections Canada. Actually depriving voters of their franchise by sending them to phantom polling stations would be a much bigger deal.

While close to 31,000 of these incidents, involving 40 some ridings, have been reported in the news as I write this column, only the ones attributed to the amusingly named "Pierre Poutine" and the ones where the call centre staff caught on that they were being used to do something wrong and stopped doing it are definite cases.

A change of 40 some seats probably would not change the government. If they all came from the Conservatives and went to the Liberals, Mr. Harper would still have at least a minority government, and he behaves much the same way whether he has a majority or not.

With both the Liberals and NDP currently in search of new leadership, neither would have wanted to provoke a new election during the last eight months, so things would have worked out much the same as they have since last May.

So far the Conservatives are responding to the polling station issue by doing what they usually do: denying first and then trying to spin the messaging into a counterattack.

Hearing the Prime Minister declaim that all the calls actually came from the Liberals made me laugh. If most of the voters targeted were Liberal supporters, as so far seems to be the case, why would the Grits want them to be unable to vote?

Granted that the Liberals have been plagued by some abysmal lapses of judgement in recent years, there really haven't been any indications that they were actually suicidal.

Mr. Harper seemed to be suggesting that they did it so that they could complain about it later. Makes no sense at all.

Later, when one of the Tory MPs tried to connect the Liberal Party to the calls, it turned out that his information was wrong and that the Liberals weren't using the US based call center he had said they were. I noticed that it was not Mr. Harper who rose to apologize for this error.

Say what you will about the Liberals, it was their Acting Leader Bob Rae who took upon himself the task of apologizing for the "Vikileaks" affair, even though it was someone else in his Party that did the deed of harassing the Public Safety Minister Vic Toews after his over-the-top defense of the Internet spying bill.

The most recent news, as of this writing, is that Elections Canada is actually investigating 700 of the complaints.

Also of interest is the CBC report, echoed in other news media, that my suspicion of two weeks ago (when I first wrote this column) that there might be a connection between the survey calls and the robo-calls seems to be more than a slight possibility.

I don't know about you, but I await the results of that investigation with some interest.

Golf Course Transfer Plan Seems to have Stalled

The future of the Top of the World Golf Course remains up in the air, as the territorial government seems to have put the matter on hold since the New Year. Concerns about the lack of progress in the paperwork dealing with the land transfer that was supposed to have been nearly completed in mid-December of 2011 were raised at both the Chamber of Commerce and Dawson's council in February.

In December, it was learned that the territorial government had decided to write-off the majority of the debt owed by the golf course, which was the property of the late Bill Hakonson, to accept the personal guarantee of $55,000 that had been offered by Mr. Hakonson, and let the remaining amount, nearly $400,000, go.

In addition, the government was in agreement with Mr.

Looking up at the clubhouse from a green on the lower set of holes

Hakonson's wish to give the land and business to the City of Dawson, to operate as a golf course.

The town stated clearly that it would not run the facility but would find a third party to operate it, and gave first reading to a bylaw allowing it to own a business outside of the town's boundaries. The legal details of the agreement between the town and YTG were to have been outlined in an appendix to the bylaw, a document to be supplied by the government.

That appendix is still missing and the bylaw is incomplete without it.

Representing both

(which will not be operating the golf course) and the Dawson Golf Association (which will likely be involved) Gary Parker asked MLA Sandy Silver (Liberal, Klondike) if he could shed any light on the delay.

"I wish I could," Silver replied at the chamber meeting. "As of the sitting (of the legislature) things were a go, and since the New Year there seems to have been a stall."

Greg Hakonson agreed that things had looked rosy before Christmas.

"Everybody was in agreement as to the settlement, and since it's gotten stalled with the government's lawyer."

Hakonson said that the unexplained delay is close to jeopardizing the coming year for the operation. There are things that need to be done, contracts to be signed with potential staff, plans to be made, supplies to be ordered. All of these things are, he said, time sensitive. February

Klondike Visitors Association is an important time on the calendar and he was sure the government had been aware of that.

> "That understanding seems to have gone out the window. I don't know why. Don't know if it's him (the lawyer) or his client (the government). Our hands are tied."

> At the town council meeting two weeks later, Mayor Peter Jenkins indicated that the golf course had been one of several topics raised with a brace of cabinet ministers, including Minster of Community Services Elaine Taylor, when they had visited with council the day before.

> "It's kind of like everything else," he observed. "We spoke, she listened and what'll happen, we don't know. They're going to get back to us.

> "It's time sensitive and we're acutely aware of the issues surrounding getting some definitive answers."

Rangers Hold Graduation Exercise for Operation Mate

Story & Photos by Dan Davidson

Dawson Rangers completed a 12-Day Training Exercise during February and a Graduation Parade was held on Feb. 29, with

Top Shot Ranger Guy Couture

Sergeant Bill Cornish from Commander's Pennantfortheir First Canadian Ranger Patrol Group in Yellowknife as their trainer and special guest and Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in elder Peggy Kormendy assisting with the presentations.

It was also a time to catch up on a number of overdue presentations.

The Canadian Decoration (CD) for 12 years of service was presented to Ranger (RGR) Willie Fellers, RGR Peter Jensen, RGR Darren Kormendy and Corporal (CPL) Mitchell Strid.

The Special Service Medal (SSM) for six years of service was presented to RGR Janet Bell, RGR Guy Couture, RGR Jonathan Dowdell, RGR Doug Fraser, RGR Jeremy Lancaster, RGR Berwyn Larson, RGR Kyler Mather, CPL Richard Nagano, CPL Simon Nagano, RGR John Taylor and RGR Melina Tessier Fontaine.

Guy Couture was awarded Top Shot in the Ranger's rifle competition.

Brian McDonald received the St John's Ambulance Award for savingalifeafterasnowmobile accident endangered a fellow Ranger. McDonald and three other Rangers received the role in this rescue. The others were CPL Bob Blanchard, RGR Melina Tessier Fontaine and RGR Corrie Loewen.

McDonald led in the administration of First Aid that stabilized the victim for transportation by helicopter from the scene of the accident to the hospital. Blanchard, Loewen and Fontaine assisted McDonaldwiththefirstaidand cut a chopper pad for medivac. Fontaine accompanied the victim as a First Aid attendant on the flight.

The crew also recovered the damaged skidoo, brought it to town and assisted in repairs.

The citation, by Brigadier General J.J.K. Hamel, Commander - Joint Task Force North, read, "For the prompt and continued application of First Aid ..." that "... prevented a major injury from turning into a life threatening situation."

Ranger Sergeant John "Mitch" Mitchell reported that eight Rangers (CPL Bob Blanchard, RGR Guv Couture, RGR Melina Tessier Fontaine, RGR Peter Brokking, RGR Brad Whitelaw, RGR Steven Kormendy, Jonathan Dowdell and RGR Berwyn Larson) "successfully graduated from an Avalanche Training Course presented by Kirstie Simpson of Avalanche North with her trusty avalanche dog Brody.

"The training is in response to the increased risk of an avalanche incident as we push patrols into new areas of operation along the Dempster Highway.

"This was a pilot project for 1CRPG. The course was a great success and another course is planned for the other Yukon Ranger Patrols in March.

"In terms of participation this was our largest ever since our standup in 1991," Mitchell said. "A total of 31 Rangers were out on the land operating in Five Sections, including five new recruits: Phillippe Bartholemous, Ron McCready, Jarred Mather, Kevin Hastings and Scott Widmeyer."

During this Exercise the Rangers:

- pre-positioned a fuel cache for a long range Sovereignty Patrol planned for late March
- conducted qualifications and weapons familiarization
- conducted numerous localreconnaissancepatrolsin the vicinity of Cache Creek and did a Patrol strength Search and Rescue scenario.

"The Exercise was named Operation Mate, in memory of Ranger Jack Semple, who left us this past summer. A simple ceremony of remembrance was held in his memory at the conclusion of the Exercise.

"It was an excellent Exercise; the instructor was pleased with the performance.

"We'd like to thank the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in for their generous provision of the Community Hall for the class room training and the use of the Cache Creek site for our operations base."

Berton House is a Productive Residency, says Dowhal

For someone who wants to really concentrate on his or her writing, Berton House is a great place to be. That's the verdict of Dan Dowhal, who was in residence from late December to nearly the end of February.

"The key is the idea that it is a retreat. I have had, hands down, the most intense period of productivity, just in terms of sheer output, as a writer, while I've been up here.

"I've been writing virtually every day for the nine weeks that I was here. It's been phenomenally productive not having the distractions, not having to worry about everything else in terms of the day-to-day part of life. That was first and foremost."

That was not all, however. The Toronto native found a new perspective.

"This is going to sound trite, but I really think I've discovered my inner Canadian up here."

He's used to having his home town dumped on when he reveals his home, and on his first night out here someone said "Welcome to Canada" when he said where he was from.

"This (place) seems closer to the spirit of Canada that we try to celebrate when we do, when we ask ourselves 'what is Canada'. Between the history and the place itself and its lore and all of that, I just felt that rekindle within me. There's a spirit that's tangible here."

There's also a busyness here that he did not expect. On the day before we sat down for this chat, he had found himself triple booked with things he wanted to do and events he wanted to attend.

Dan has actually gone most of his life as "Danny", which was already a change from the Ukrainian Danilo that he was christened. When he and his publishers decided that "Dan" would be better as his professional writer's name, he wasn't prepared for what happened next.

"I should have been, given that the importance of names is such a big part of my novel, Flam Grub, but I didn't think of it."

Dan Dowhal enjoyed his time at Berton House

Now, he finds that a lot of people relate to him as Dan, except for the members of the co-ed softball team he coaches in Toronto. They're sponsored by a bar in Parkdale and when he introduced himself there, one of his players had had a bad relationship with a guy named Danny, so she said, "I'm gonna call you Danno". Such is the power of bartenders that "Danno" is how he is known in that part of town.

In Dawson, he's pretty much been "Dan", whether hanging out at the Pit or one of the other bars to hear the music, going to the fitness center on Front Street, or practicing his wrist shot at the Frye Arena during lunch hours. Improving his wrist shot was another goal (so to speak) that he set himself for his 60 days in Dawson.

"I started playing hockey late in life and the guys I play with have all been at it since they were five or six. My slapshot's okay, but my wrist shot has always been anemic."

He enjoyed the arena.

"The idea that I'd be able to go and skate for an hour and a half, and there'd be just six people on the ice, that's pretty unheard of in the city."

Back in Toronto operates the Learning Edge, a multimedia company, which he started with two of his brothers two decades ago. He started out with a technical background, but combined interests in writing, journalism and illustration, and found that almost everything except writing fiction could come together under this umbrella.

Dowhal knew he wanted to write fiction from an early age, but it never seemed to be a way that he could make a living. Still, he was not satisfied with his life.

"But the urge never went away. One of things that persuaded me it was real was that it haunted me so badly. I finally decided to make some sacrifices and get serious about it."

He had lots to write about because he had been storing up ideas for decades.

"I had a backlog, coming up with the ideas and sketching out the books. Now I have a bit of a logjam and a sense of urgency."

How is he overcoming his late start?

"In the end it's all about discipline. It's an art and a craft and sometimes more craft than art.

He says that the time he spent doing a different kind of writing, as a journalist, taught him that it was possible to function to a deadline and that sometimes having a deadline was useful in stoking the fires.

Banjo

Banjo is a male Bernese mountain dog-husky cross, and approximately three years old.

His markings are very unique with the eyebrows of a mountain dog, and silvery undertones coming through his black coat.

Banjo is fun-loving and very playful. He is loving and gentle with all visitors, and would make a great addition to any household.

Banjo has been with us for about five months and has never acted up or misbehaved once on me. He is great on and off the leash - he likes to pull when on leash, but I think that's a good thing.

They were locals and they thought they could play music and sing and write just as good as every one else. Know what? They were right!

There is a lot of talent in the Yukon and you see them every day. There is Michael, who has a voice from God. There is Dwayne who was, and still is, a

The point of this article is five men who dreamed a dream. AND their dream became a reality.

Yukon MS Patients Invited to U.S. Clinical Treatment Trials

WHITEHORSE (March 13, 2012) —Yukon residents diagnosed with multiple sclerosis (MS) are being invited to apply for spots available in the "liberation treatment" clinical trials in Albany, New York.

Several spots in the clinical trial have been secured for Yukon residents who are found to be eligible, based on criteria set by the clinical trial hosts.

The Albany clinical trial will examine the effectiveness of the liberation treatment procedure. It will compare people with MS who undergo the liberation procedure which includes angioplasty (a technique of mechanically widening a narrowed or obstructed blood vessel), with people with MS who undergo a very similar procedure but does not include the angioplasty.

From the eligible Yukon residents with MS who apply, 10 will be chosen through a random selection process to participate in the initial telephone interview that is the first step in the clinical trial's screening program. From those who are interviewed, it is anticipated that seven or eight will pass the initial screen and then go to Regina for the in-person part of the screening program, which will involve a medical exam, specialized diagnostic imaging and a consent process.

Jenny Roberts, president of the Yukon Multiple Sclerosis Association, said that all her members are very excited and look forward to submitting their names for the clinical trial selection.

"I believe that our involvement from the beginning has helped break new ground and paved the way for Yukon's participation in these trials. We are so excited to be at this point," Roberts said.

It is expected that six Yukon patients at most will be accepted for the final step of participating in the Albany clinical trial.

Eligible Yukon participants cannot have had the treatment before, must be between the ages of 18 and 60 years, must be able to travel to the U.S. and make a two year commitment for follow-ups.

The application form and details of the trial are available from physicians, community health centres and online. Deadline for application submissions is April 30.

Avoid Carbon Monoxide Poisioning

Prepared by Jim Regimbal, fire chief

What's the big deal?

Carbon monoxide poisoning is the number one cause of accidental poisoning deaths in North America. Know the facts. What is carbon monoxide?

Carbon monoxide is a gas that you can't see, smell or taste. It is produced by gas or oil furnaces, space and water heaters, clothes dryers, ovens, wood stoves and other household appliances that run on fossil fuels such as wood, gas, oil or coal.

Why is carbon monoxide so deadly?

When you inhale carbon monoxide, it can cause brain damage, suffocation or death. Because you cannot see, smell or taste this deadly gas, poisoning can happen to anyone, anytime, anywhere. Everyone is at risk but pregnant women, young children, senior citizens and people with heart and lung problems are at greater risk. If your home is well sealed or not well ventilated, the levels of carbon monoxide in the air may easily rise to deadly levels.

Warning Signs:

Carbon monoxide poisoning and the flu seem a lot alike at first. Early warning signs of low-level poisoning include tiredness, headaches, dizziness, nausea or vomiting and shortness of breath. Your skin may also turn pink or red in response to rising blood pressure. If you experience any of these symptoms, you may be suffering from carbon monoxide poisoning and should call the fire department at 993-2222 as well as talk to your doctor.

Protect Yourself:

- Install at least one carbon monoxide detector on every level of your home, especially outside sleeping areas. There are several types of detectors, including battery-operated and plugin models. Install the carbon monoxide detector according to the manufacturer's instructions.
- Have a qualified service technician inspect and clean your fuelburning appliances, furnace, vent pipe and chimney flues once a year. Bird's nests, twigs and old mortar in chimneys can block proper ventilation and lead to build-up of carbon monoxide gas in the home.

Maintenance:

Test your carbon monoxide detector regularly to make sure it is operating properly. The owner's manual should tell you how to test your alarm. Remember to check the manual for information on when to buy a new carbon monoxide detector.

What should you do if the detector alarm sounds?

If the detector sounds, you and all members of your household should leave your home immediately. From outside the home, call the fire department emergency line at 993-2222. Don't go back inside until the problem has been found and corrected. The Fire Department will inspect your home to find the source of the carbon monoxide.

Carbon Monoxide Detector Placement:

Proper placement of a carbon monoxide detector is important. If you are installing only one carbon monoxide detector, the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) recommends it be located near the sleeping area, where it can wake you if you are asleep. Additional detectors on every level and in every bedroom of a home provide extra protection.

Homeowners should remember not to install carbon monoxide detectors directly above or beside fuel-burning appliances, as appliances may emit a small amount of carbon monoxide upon

Always follow the manufacturer's instructions when installing your carbon monoxide detector.

Common Misconceptions:

Here are five common misconceptions which you might find interesting:

I only need to take precautions in winter...

Wrong! You still cook and heat water during the summer months.

It's just caused by traffic pollution...

Wrong! You are most at danger in your own home.

It's just caused by gas appliances...

Wrong! All fossil fuels - oil, natural gas, coal and LPG - are equally

It's just a problem for students and tenants...

Wrong! By far and away the biggest sufferers are owner occupiers.

In case of fire or an emergency, call 993-2222

My Maritime Queen

My grandmother, Nancy Jane Salmon, passed away a year ago March 17.

The first year is always the hardest when grieving someone. Even though my grandmother lived a rich and full life, I still find I miss her, especially during those special times when the family always got together.

I know in the last six months, we have witnessed the passing of many dear friends in Dawson, who were pillars of our community. I have grieved the loss of these senior members and although I did not know them well, the letters in the Klondike Sun helped me recognize the values, traditions and lessons that are passed down, just like with my grandmother's Grieving the loss of someone is a process as I find myself, a year later, feeling much more at peace with it all. They say there are seven stages that grief must go through until there is a feeling of peace. I have definitely gone through them: denial, guilt, anger, depression, the upward turn, acceptance and hope.

I know that on the eve of my grandmother's death, I will not all of a sudden be over the grieving process, but there is a sense of closure, that life will go on and through family conversations, that wonderful story telling tradition, her spirit lives on.

I always found death a difficult part of life to accept until I experienced the loss of my Hebrew friend's father. I say fortunate because experiencing another faith in mourning, I found it made a lot of sense and it recognized death as a cycle of life.

I don't know about you, but I was raised to mourn, but after the funeral it was time to accept the loss and move on. I suppose that is my Scottish-English roots, being stoic, never letting your guard down, never crying or showing weakness, especially for

I digress, but in the Jewish faith, they have a seven day mourning period (Shiva), which transfers to a one month mourning period (shloshim) and if you are grieving a parent, the mourning process lasts for a year.

I questioned the one year grieving process and it was explained to me that your parent or the person who raised you, has such a strong, emotional and spiritual connection that it takes at least a year to accept the loss: "this period of time helps us focus on recognizing the good that our parents desperately tried to give in the best way that they could."

That quotation from ABC's of Death and Mourning by Lori Palatnik sums it all up for me. It is so easy to be frustrated or angry with a parent, but when it comes to death, I find I can remember so many more positive experiences than negative experiences.

My grandmother didn't raise me, but we had a strong connection, we always did and because of that connection, here I am today, a year later, reminiscing about her and recognizing her amazing qualities and gifts.

My Maritime Queen

She was like no other, Beautiful in her grace and charm, Stubborn, proud, an amazingly strong constitution,

Her uncanny ability with money, Her love of gambling, traveling and dancing. She was wise with the affairs of life, She stated her opinion, whether you wanted her to or not.

And in the end, she was usually right! Her family was everything, Even with her children, grandchildren and great children so many miles away. She loved her telephone chats and hearing about her family's adventures and misadventures!

She lived a hard and honest life, She was always so giving to a stranger, a friend or to family.

Her wisdom, humility, generosity, laughter and loving kindness

I will always try to emulate and never forget.

Here's to you Nan, my Maritime Queen!

Reconcilation is a Personal Journey

by Colleen Simard, columnist, Troy Media

Reconciliation is a word that's been cropping up in the media lately.

The word is often mentioned in relation to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's recently released interim report and a publication entitled They Came for the Children: Canada, Aboriginal Peoples, and Residential Schools.

Since 2009, the TRC has collected more than 3,000 personal stories from residential school survivors across Canada. This report is what they've produced so far.

Gathering these stories is a painful process but it needs to be done. As with many tragedies, we need to remember in order to avoid repeating the mistakes that were made. Residential schools have always been a tough subject matter for me to write about. I used to think they didn't have an effect on me, considering my direct family line back to my great-grandpa and great-grandma never went to a residential school.

But I was wrong.

Sure, I grew up without my language and cultural knowledge, but what was worse was growing up seeing so many abusive relationships, and having parents who didn't know how to show affection. It was only later in life when I became an adult that we've learned to say we love each other.

But it wasn't their fault.

I've come to realize much of the physical and emotional abuse put upon me was passed down from the generations before who had no way to understand what was done to them. Remember, they were only children.

This is how those children were raised so it's how they raised us

Sometimes it takes decades to resolve images of the past.

One clear memory I have is getting my head dunked repeatedly in a sink of water. This act was perpetrated by a residential school survivor - one of my mom's boyfriends.

Another memory is being lifted off the ground by my ears and yelled at in my face by a family member who went to residential school. I didn't understand so many things when I was a child, but I do now. This is part of my legacy, but my past doesn't define me.

These memories may sound bad but they are bedtime stories compared to some of the ones I've heard from some people who actually went to residential schools. Some of those stories have kept me up at night.

Is it any wonder we've got so many addictions issues in our communities?

Some children couldn't overcome the abuses they suffered.

And there are still abusers in our communities who are quietly spreading their sickness - especially sexual abuse.

Reconciliation is a personal journey.

Today, I sometimes sit and watch my baby daughter play. I wonder how hard it must have been for parents to let their children go off to a residential school at four years old. How could they go on living?

I've learned good things, too. Like only I am responsible for what path my life takes. It hasn't always been easy, but it's been easier than most. I am one of the lucky ones compared to some of my relatives

The knowledge I've gathered isn't to cast blame but to learn how and where the abuses came from. Without truth there can be no reconciliation.

First comes the grief

And before there can be reconciliation there has to be grieving. Just like the abuse, it could take many more years and several generations to come to terms with the after effects.

I said it years ago and I'll say it again - residential schools were a cultural genocide.

Let the stories and the grief come out. Reconciliation will follow in due time.

Try to read or listen to one person's story if you can. Reconciliation isn't only for aboriginal people, but for all Canadians to understand how devastating to aboriginal people this forced assimilation was.

We must reconcile that this is part of our shared history. Then we can all move forward.

Former Yukon Reporter Searches for Everyday Epiphanies

A Rumour of God: Rekindling Belief in an Age of Disenchantment By Robert C. Sibley Novalis Books 375 pages $24.95

While there is quite a bit of resistance to it, it does seem true that there is a resurgence of interest in spirituality in the world. Sadly, some of it is quite extreme and off the wall, making it difficult to take it seriously, but it's there.

The prevailing worldview since the time of Voltaire, if John Ralston Saul has it right, has been to take religion and things of the spirit lightly, since they do not easily conform to a mindset totally devoted to reason and rationality.

Saul went on to note that rationality is only one type of reason and devoted a book, Equilibrium, to discussing the other types.

Still there is that prevailing negativity towards anything connected with spirituality, as noted by Peter Hitchens in The [RAGE] Against God and by David Adams Richards in God Is. They both contend that they had trouble finding their way to faith because they were swimming in a world in which the prevailing attitude is to be dismissive of it.

In their view, it doesn't actually require any penetrating analysis or thought to become a religious skeptic in the Western world. The attitude is as pervasive as our penchant for wearing blue jeans and is simply a matter of going with the cultural flow.

It is Robert Sibley's view that the world has become disenchanted and the potential for religious experience has been replaced by a different kind of faith, one he calls scientism. He contends that here is a need for some kind of a sense of the divine. He's carefully non-specific about which faith he means, but he does make reference to C.S. Lewis's dictum that one way to acquire faith is to behave as if you have it.

Sibley says that we humans are short-changing our experience of life unless we allow ourselves to experience the occasional glimpses of the divine in the ordinary world. We need to be open to being surprised by joy (Lewis again) and to the epiphanies of everyday life.

The seven essays in this sometimes dense book address this question. The book can be heavy going at times, due in part to Sibley's habit of quoting a great many other writers along his journey, but his adoption of a simple bookend style for each essay does help center the reader's attention.

Simply put, each piece begins and ends with an autobiographical experience, a time when Sibley experienced one of those momentary flashes of understanding he refers to as epiphanies. You can't plan these things, and there is no guarantee that repeating the exact experience that brought one on will cause it to repeat. They are moments when you simply know that there is more to this existence than is hinted at in your experience. You catch a glimpse of the underglimmer, as Sibley puts it, and it makes all the difference.

The remaining chapters give examples of different types of situations where this has happened to him; situations given support examples of thought from literature, psychology, religion and history - hence the 36 pages of footnotes, bibliography and index at the end of the book.

In "The Long Way Home" he finds the experience in his personal roots. Other chapters extol the virtues of place, solitude, wonder, and walking, the latter activity being one which he finds particularly effective.

Two of the vignettes take place in the Yukon, others in British Columbia, Spain, Japan and England. Sibley is particularly fond of walking tours and pilgrimages and has written extensively about his experiences in Spain and Japan.

On these journeys and in other parts of his daily walk, he says he seeks to find a way to locate the mysticism of everyday life; something that he feels is essential to help us navigate our way through this life.

Robert C. Sibley apparently grew up in Alberta and the Yukon and some of his earliest jobs were in the territory. In 1970 he had a job in construction that required him to drive the Carcross Road regularly and be mesmerized by Emerald Lake. By 1976 he was employed by a mining company doing some exploration near Ross River and was left alone in a bush camp for days at a time. In 1977 he went to work at the Whitehorse Star. This is the year I began scribbling for that paper, so we probably shared space in the odd edition or

He went on to the Edmonton Journal in 1978 and moved to the Ottawa Citizen in 1986. He has worked his way through the ranks as reporter, feature writer, opinion page editor, editorial writer, columnist and, now, senior writer, and somewhere along the way he acquired a PhD in political science from Carlton University, where he is also an adjunct professor.

His Citizen blog is called "Ideas and Consequences" and contains some interesting material. He seems to write series from time to time. His 15 pieces on the monuments of Ottawa, as well as some of his travel writings related to his walking journeys are available for downloading from the paper's website.

Third Year In The Mine

A poem by Robin T. Platt

"You ugly Tobacco chewing old goat
If you ever need mouth to mouth resuscitation
You're gonna die
Nobody would want to put his mouth on yours
Snaggle tooth."

He took the hard assing easily Like his life

I hung suspended trapped
Between pipe and wire
270 volts d/c
Went through me to the pipe
The strangling screams I heard
I thought were not my own

I wake up on the rocky mine floor A taste of chewed tobacco in my mouth I open my eyes My angel partner spits and grins.

Seeing Stories as a Way of Finding Directions

Parks Canada historian David Neufeld came to a better understanding of his own family history while studying with the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in.

He began his talk, "Moving Islands and Sticky Sandbars", during the Myth and Medium conference by explaining how Mennonites of his grandmother's generation looked at the world.

It helps to understand that the Mennonites themselves were a unique people, a branch of the Anabaptist line of Protestant Christianity. They had little use for the hierarchies of either church or state, and so were persecuted and forced to move from place to place during the 16th and 17th centuries. Settling in what is now the Ukraine, they prospered there until the Russian Revolution of 1917.

To the communists, they were both religious and economically successful – two strikes against them – and once again they were persecuted. Neufeld's Grozsma Sarah Albrecht, who was born in the late 1890s, came to Canada along with many others.

Neufeld said she had an interesting way of interpreting the experience and the hardship. You could talk all you wanted about Marx and Lenin and the Revolution, but that wasn't how she saw it.

Mennonites often compared their wanderings to those of the Hebrews in the Old Testament, and drew meaning from that comparison. In the Bible, the Jews are often told by prophets that they are facing hard times because of their shortcomings as a nation. She saw the exodus from the Ukraine in the same light.

"Her story," he told his audience at the Dänojà Zho Cultural Centre, "was that the Mennonites had gone to Russia, they'd settled down, they built farms, they got rich, they forgot about how they were supposed to be living, and God sent the Russian Revolution to put them back in their place."

There was a difference between the official history of the era and the history of this group of people.

Neufeld said there is similar discontinuity between how settler culture looks at land and how First Nations people look at land. For people raised on European systems of thought, maps delineate property boundaries and give definite directions. Official maps are marked in grids that depend on the imaginary lines, indicating their distance from the place near London that was considered the center of the world during the British Empire.

David Neufeld at the Myth and Medium Conference in late February

For First Nations people, the journey was a more important part of travel than the end points of a route. Directions, as in their songs and dances, were full of place names and stories about relationships.

Neufeld never felt closer to understanding this than when he sought Victor Henry for directions to assist him in a trip down the Yukon River. Henry sketched a map in the gravel, but Neufeld found it told him nothing when he later compared it with his own cartographer's maps.

What was important in Henry's directions was a story about how to behave in relation to the land that he was going to encounter at a certain point in the trip. There were, he was told, a pair of moving islands, and when he came to them he would need to steer his boat in specific directions in order to get past them.

This made no sense to Neufeld, and he avoided the issue completely on the way down river by taking a side channel. On the way back, however, he had no choice, and he found, to his amazement, that the islands – two sandbars really – actually did appear to be trying to move to cut him off. Henry's words came back to him, he followed the instructions, and, sure enough, he did not run aground.

"The map wasn't very useful, but the story map was, and it worked."

He still claims not to understand the optical experience, but subsequently learned the American explorer, Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, encountered the same islands during his travels on the Yukon River in 1883. Lacking the wisdom of the story to guide him, he got his expedition stuck on the sandbars where they had to offload their raft before they could get it loose, spending what his journal describes as a miserable night's sleep on the nearby shore.

Neufeld used these two tales to illustrate the need for communication between different cultural narratives, which he saw as having been the focus of the International Polar Year project that he participated in here.

An online description of the project records that its focus was on "documenting traditional knowledge as it relates to climate change in the territory of the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in First Nation.

The resulting insights will provide perspective on what Aboriginal people in northern communities value and may help in developing strategies to adapt and cope with a changing environment. "

In practice this meant an intense round of community interviews involved the First Nation, classes at the Robert Service School, and a number of graduate students to collect the data.

A lot of material was in story form, for, as Neufeld put it, it is in stories that we make sense of the world more than in other ways.

"Management isn't about data. It's about values and it's about cultural narratives; it's about stories. How do we make sure that the stories are in there so that people understand them?"

Consensus is needed, he said, in order to negotiate our way through the laws and documents that loom like sandbars in the way of making progress for Yukoners.

"You can't make consensus on data. You can only build consensus on stories."

Neufeld concluded with the observation that if we want to build a society where "civilization" isn't a dirty word equated to "alcohol and violence" it needs to become a word that signifies a place "where people talk to each other, respect each other and work together."

Note: For a complete version of the mapping portion of Neufeld's talk, search online for "Learning to Drive the Yukon River: Western Cartography and Athapaskan Story Maps", found on pages 16 – 43 of a 2011 document "Big Country, Big Issues: Canada's Environment, Culture and History", part of the Rachel Carson Center Perspectives series.

Laura Mann: Museums as Social Institutions

Dawson City Museum Director Laura Mann's view of the role of museums has changed since she first embarked on her career in 1980 with an internship in a small museum. Speaking at the recent Myth and Medium conference in Dawson, she described her transition and some of its implications.

"Like every other museum person at the time, I believed that a museum's purpose could be summed up with five little words: collect, exhibit, research, interpret, conserve. I think I was probably far too busy learning the language and the systems to consider anything beyond what sounded on the surface like really lofty goals."

Experience and exposure to a variety of people and philosophies led her to an enhanced understanding of the museum's role in a community.

"I came to realize that museums have real potential to help our communities and our audiences find meaning."

It was the writing of Stephen E. Weil, author of such books as Rethinking the Museum and Other Meditations and Making Museums Matter, which crystallized her new understanding.

"Weil said, 'If our museums are not being operated with the ultimate goal of improving the quality of peoples' lives, on what other basis might we possibly ask for public support?'

"And, because he had a really keen sense of humour, he went on, 'Not certainly on the grounds that we need museums in order that museum professionals might have a place to work."

She came to see mere collecting and collections as being the tools of the museum's trade rather than an end in themselves.

In the mid-1990s she had an opportunity to put some of her new thinking into practice when she was asked to head up a team to design an exhibit based on the experiences of survivors of breast cancer. It helped a lot that some of these women were quite wealthy and were willing to fund the project.

She was a bit horrified to find out that the sponsors had already contacted a number of women artists to produce work based on interviews they had done with survivors. The resulting exhibit was to be called "Survivors in Search of a Voice".

She was concerned that the survivors seemed to have been struck dumb and weren't really speaking for themselves. Others were concerned that this had very little to do with what they felt was the main role of a museum and would end up producing a sort of victim exhibition.

Mann discovered the existence of another project on the same topic, called "Healing Legacies", which seem to lend itself better to the museum setting, and was also more the work of actual survivors rather than mediated through other people. Blending the ideas seemed to offer a better solution.

The project team - four museum staff, plus about fourteen other people from the ranks of breast cancer patients, cancer agencies and medical professionals - eventually decided to put out a call for submissions and ended up with about "130 pieces from 49 women with about a third of them local. There were works of art, crafts and writing."

The problem at this point was that the original philanthropists unhappy with expanded vision of the show and withdrew their offer of support. This actually turned out to be a blessing.

Themuseumboard was still uneasy and Mann had to sell the project.

"This was not about the collection," she told them. "It was about our ability to help people understand something that virtually touches every family. It was about the museum being a forum."

The majority of the board approved the exhibit and opened in 1997 after a year of planning. People were still nervous about it, but the exhibit was a success. People looked at everything, read everything and came away moved. Press coverage was positive. Staff who had been opposed were converted by the outcome.

The slide presentation that ran while she was speaking showed an impressive looking exhibit that, while serious in its content, was nevertheless professional and positive in its outlook. The pieces were grouped according to where they fit under such headings as Change, Journey and Meaning.

Mann said that museums in the Yukon, though underfunded, were at least stably funded, and our unique mix of tourists in the summer and locals in the winter made it possible to run two different types of programs for the two different audiences. For one group we are laying out or past and our accomplishments. For the other we can be helping locals understand themselves.

"Imagine what might happen if one of our institutions did a project on the Peel Watershed, or what might have happened if there had been a project about the location of the new hospital, or the sewage treatment facility here in Dawson? Maybe nothing. Maybe everything.

"What if your institutions became the places where people automatically went to for information?"

There are problems to be solved before these possibilities can open up. Mann cited the gaps in funding and trained staff between the larger institutions and the smaller ones.

"But I believe the potential is there and I believe that Dawson can be leading the way."

Mann concluded with a few thoughts from the work of Robert James, who wrote Museums in a Troubled World: Renewal, Irrelevance or Collapse?

James writes that museums need to be resilient to be able to adjust to changing conditions, misfortunes and situations. Mann provided a couple of quotations to end her talk.

"'As self-professed keepers of the continuum (of history) and all those acts which preceded us, as well as the champions of their present and future meaning, can museums not be the harbingers of an adaptive future?'

"If museums did not exist, would we reinvent them, and what would they look like?"

Extinct Animals of the North: The Woolly Mammoth

by Lisa McKenna

The woolly mammoth is an extinct genus of the modern elephant. It is more closely related to the Asian elephant, even though the mammoths are believed to have originated in Africa.

The mammoth and the Asian elephants split off from their origins with the African elephant about five to six million years ago. It is a point of interest to note that this is approximately the same time as homo sapiens split from apes.

Most mammoths died at the end of the last Ice Age (10,000 years ago) and, like the saber toothed tiger, it is not yet known now how this occurred. Was it a lack of food? Was it finally too extreme of a climate? Was it due to a sickness? Was it annihilation by human kind? (Mammoth meat has been recorded as being eaten by Homo Sapiens over 1.8 million years ago.) We may never know.

Mammoths had a great adaptation to cold. Their teeth were adapted to the tough Northern grasses and brush, their hair was 50 cm (20 inches) long and greased by many sebaceous glands in their skin (sebaceous means secreting oils) which increased their fight against cold. The mammoth also had over eight cm, or three inches, of fat under their skin!

A grown mammoth could weigh up to eight TONS! They had curved tusks that reached over five meters long (16 feet for the non-metrics among us). Their tusks are believed to nave grown to to enable them to sweep the snow, increasing their ability to find food under the snow.

Dwarf mammoths, who only weighed one ton and were only 1.4 to 2.1 meters at the shoulder (that's 4.5 to 7 feet) survived on Wrangle Island, which is off of Russia, and only became extinct in 1700 to 1500 B.C. but Wrangle island was very remote and uninhabited.

Wrangle Island is also home to the largest breeding ground of the polar bear. It also has seals, walruses, lemmings, numerous bird species, Arctic foxes and even Arctic wolves,

A sketch of a woolly mammoth by Erwin Christ-Osborn.

but this could be due to the introduction of reindeer (1950) or the musk ox (which was introduced in 1975.)

Wrangle Island was declared a World Heritage site in 2004, although in 1976 the Russian Government had nature reserve" with no human occupation except for scientists, but this was still strictly limited. In 1999 they also included 24 nautical miles off the coast of Wrangle.

There are legends about these magnificent creatures. Who is to say that they are not true?

An ancient Kaska tale tells about a woman who saw one of these beasts and scurried back to camp to her husband. He did not believe her and he went to sleep. The woman then cut a trail through the willows for a fast means of escape, then she slept with her moccasins on and her child in her arms. When she heard crashing in the bush, she poked her husband with a stick but he would not wake up! She ran with her child as the beast ate her husband.

But the beast would not quit and it followed the woman's scent. The woman reached a place where many were camped and she warned them. already classified it as a "strict The people of this place then carved many holes into the ice so the ice would break from the mammoth's great weight. The ice broke as the mammoth stepped on it, the mammoth just walked on the bottom of the river and approached the people. The woman and her child ran away, others fell down as if asleep.

One of these people was a boy, who was mistreated by the rest, but he had magic trousers and a magic bow for he was a voung shaman. He wore a moose bladder over his head and some thought him bald.

He jumped and the bladder burst, revealing his long flowing hair. Grabbing his bow and arrows he shot the beast on one side and then again on the other. The boy kept on until the beast was dead.

The people then loved this mistreated boy and they gave him two wives, of which he accepted only one, and they made him chief. This is why there are chiefs today.

64 Degrees North Techno-Tonic: Part 1

This summer in a secret exploration camp within Yukon's forests, I wondered, "Is there a world beyond labour and talking to the bears and owls?" Iceland perhaps?

Iceland Air, the national company, boasted a four-day music festival to be held in October named "Iceland Airwaves", inviting all to a week of debauchery. I could not help but imagine if Air Canada were to sponsor such an event, that it would say "come for a week of moderation".

Bjork, my musical heroine, was to play in Reykjavik. My friends from Nova Scotia that I spend Christmas Eve with every year, along with Caveman Bill, in a wee cabin filled with dogs, put it to me that I must bring her back for Christmas.

A dispute erupted over dinner between my pals, finally doused by, "Stop arguing or else Robin won't bring Bjork back, and we'll have to listen to that damn porcupine tale that we listen to every year. I want to hear her sing, 'OOohLaa, Woo, Hoo oooOh'."

Using Michael Palin, BBC gentleman adventurer, as inspiration, I thought to set out and broaden my horizons. Thus I would travel to the Island, crack some rocks.

I wasn't thinking about any of this as winter undecidedly approached. My friend Jamie gave assistance installing a stove in my cabin to ready for another onslaught of winter in the Yukon before my departure to that land of fire and ice.

"I think you're gonna need a door and some windows, it's gonna be mighty cold when you get back in December," she said.

Jamie had a point. Two years ago I couldn't seem to keep the heat in an old shack I'd moved into. After a week of frustration from living in frozen, cramped conditions, I moved a bed that leaned against the wall, only to discover an open window pulsating -30C air into the place

With a little Northern spirit, as there were only days left to I'Day - actually that isn't entirely true - and after celebrating Thanksgiving three times, we got to work on "getting 'er done".

After a few days flying from Dawson City, I landed in Keflavik airport, Iceland. Like a duckling, I followed my fellow passengers in search of luggage.

Exiting the terminal, I breathed in fresh Atlantic air and wondered how to get to my hotel in Reykjavik.

Fortunately, someone thought of that - a little booth called "Fly Bus", with a graphic of a coach version of "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang" promised to deliver me to the door of my hotel.

Awesome.

Within the hour I arrived at my hotel, a little disappointed the bus was of standard issue - no wings. I dropped my luggage off and went in search of kaffee - that's Icelandic for coffee, and it all comes at espresso strength.

The 101 Downtown area is the swanky part of Reykjavik, with an eclectic mix of old Scandinavian architecture, contemporary futurist styles borrowed from Bauhaus, and influences from nature and science.

At a tourist information centre, the staff got me onboard with a few options for day tour packages. In some apology to Yukoners who may say, "What? Get a truck and get out there!", unfortunately, though that is the truer spirit, I am perhaps the Yukon's worst driver - strongly influenced by 80s postapocalyptic car chase movies.

With tickets proudly bunched in hand I headed to the newly opened Harpa Concert Hall by the harbour. My jaw dropping in awe, I stared at its 3D windows refracting light This was to be the venue for the forthcoming Bjork concert, and in a humble voice I asked, "I've come a long way and I want a ticket."

I managed to acquire one. BAM! All that was left was to invite her for Christmas in Dawson.

Essential language, shopping and history in Reykjavik:

O.K., so I got my tickets, and all that was left to do was to get outfitted to survive this land.

First, a book and C.D. Learning Icelandic, which was of no use as the C.D. refused to work, and the book was written in Icelandic with no suggestion how to pronounce some of the arcane vowels which haven't been in use in the English language for 800 years. No phonetics either, and English syntax an after-thought.

However, I got it down: takk – thanks. Yeow – yeah. Hallo – hello. Bjer – beer. Bless – goodbye.

Fortunately, some Danes came to my aid. One bar manager asked me one night after my having said, "Ye eg coupe eine bjer?"

"What is it that you are trying to say?" he replied.

"Why do you bother to learn Icelandic in a week, it takes years and everybody speaks English."

Hey, I thought in defence that I had two weeks and with this adopted language of being able to enter any "drukken" conversation fluently, as long as it wasn't involved and going beyond skoll.

Communications covered, it was off to the mountaineering store.

The island fabricates a lot of its own gear with prices comparable to that of the Yukon. Crampons were a must if I was going to traverse glaciers.

I could have done with some last winter and not suffered terrifying flashbacks of sliding down steep mountainsides, saved only by my trusty iceaxe which I clung to for dear life. After such events my boss, for reasons of improving awareness and safety, would question, "And how did you find that?"

Without giving a detailed account of shopping in the capitol, one must appreciate that there are a plethora of stores, everything from Inuit furs and artifacts from Greenland, to locally forged Damascus steel knives, and of course, the highly coveted woollen products.

There is a strong sense of the cosmopolitan in Reykjavik - a Scandinavian backdrop with independence and culture from Europe and America. Until 1, 000 years ago, the country was a self-governing body of Irish and Norse settlers. Then Norway, and later Denmark, ruled the island.

It succeeded in sovereignty after the Anglo-American occupation of WWII.

From the affluent, democratic days of the first migrants, to the tyranny of Kings, to a mini Ice Age which devastated the population and forest, today, good humoured people live beneath a threat of earthquakes, biblical flooding and volcanic eruptions. They stoically shrug their shoulders it is part of being Icelandic.

Eating out:

Succumbing to my appetite, it was time to go in search of food. What do people eat, I wondered? Fish probably. Looking at the menus in passing I realised that the postcards of horses, puffins and whales were merely serving suggestions.

One bistro boasted "Locally shot Polar Bear".

I met an Islander who informed me that on occasion the bears drift over on pack-ice from Greenland, spinning on the North Atlantic Ocean, the currents take them to Iceland where they are dispatched and turned into rugs and make excellent steaks.

There was one dish I was particularly appalled by: fermented shark. A lady enthusiastically served this delicacy to me and explained in warning that I shouldn't smell it but rather enjoy its texture and flavour.

Small white cubes of the meat sat in a bowl before me. I probed at them with a cocktail stick. The texture likened to tofu, I just had to go beyond the aroma. The flavour as I chewed and bravely swallowed this throwback food of the Vikings, was foul, burning my nostrils with ammonia, giving great urge to vomit.

This was expected and my hostess delicately laughed at my torment, suggesting that in future I drink Schnapps with the shark.

It is strange to think what our ancestors in their various lands went through to survive the different ages. I don't believe mine would have considered rotten shark. I prefer to imagine them consuming smoked moose accompanied by cranberry jelly and spruce tip beer.

But as I describe, the fare is large and lamb can often be found on the table. Less like European lamb, the local breed is akin in stamina to those of the Yukon, scaling cliffs and grazing on wild grasses. Their flavour is strong like that of Dall sheep.

Accompanying the mass of restaurants, it was soon evident that they are outnumbered by the bars. With great zeal, revellers quieted around 6 a.m. on the weekends, and ear muffs were strongly advised for those wishing to sleep.

Strong boots are a must to crunch over broken glass in the streets in the mornings. Clearly pint glasses are too bothersome to carry at 5 a.m.

The bars I visited were friendly, similar to Dawson. Most had live music, anything from rock to contemporary experimental.

Thinking About the Social Life of Stories

Anthropologist Julie Cruikshank was one of several speakers at the Myth and Medium conference held at the Dänojà Zho Cultural Centre.

In two presentations during the conference she discussed her experiences working with the stories of First Nations women elders south of Whitehorse and in Dawson City between 1974 and 1991.

Cruikshank's first presentation was called "The Afterlife of Stories".

The task became her career as the result of requests from native women of her own age when she first moved to the Yukon, not dreaming she would return to university and pursue a degree in anthropology.

Cruikshank's friends noticed there was quite a bit of information being recorded about the history of men's lives in the territory, but not much about women, so they asked her to begin a series of conversations with women elders to record their life stories.

That is not what the women she spoke with wanted to talk about. Instead of telling stories about their own lives, they wanted to tell the traditional stories they had grown up with, the teaching tales that were used to pass on culture, morality and common sense from generation to generation.

As one of the women, Angela Sidney, told her in a phrase that became the title of the first collection of tales in 1977, "My stories are my wealth."

It was also Sidney who gave an indication of the importance of stories in native tradition when she said, "I've tried to live my life right, just like a story."

Cruikshank found she entered her task with a set of questions, things she had been asked to find out by the younger women who engaged her assistance. What happened instead is that her interview subjects decided they needed to teach her what questions were important enough to be asked and answered, and they did this through the medium of storytelling.

"I expected I'd hear stories about the Gold Rush, about the Alaska Highway, about the missionary activity, and about the movement of the Canadian state into family lives. I expected to hear stories of struggle and about the lives of women who had lived through this extraordinary time, beginning in the 1890s and the rest of their lives into the 1900s."

Instead, she got a course in how to use stories to think about life, an approach she went on to illustrate by talking about one particular story that was used by Sidney on several key occasions during her life.

The story was that of Kaak'achgóok (which can be found on pages 28 to 35 of Cruikshank's book The Social Life of Stories). The story involved a journey and a struggle in which the central characters overcame great hardship to get back home. Part of their journey involved following the path of the sun, which took on a great symbolic value.

In 1945 she told the story as a gift to her son who was returning from his own struggle in the Canadian Forces during World War II. There was some question from elders as to whether this was a legitimate telling, but she was able to establish that the story did, in fact, belong to her clan, and was therefore a suitable gift.

As a result of her research she discovered the story had earlier been used to settle a fractious dispute between two rival Tlingit clans. This information also gave her real legitimacy as a storyteller.

Subsequently she told the story over CBC radio.

In 1988 she told it again in a public forum, at the commemorative exercises for Yukon College, for she said the new college was like a sun for her people.

"Instead of going to Vancouver or Victoria, they're going to be able to stay here and go to school here. We're not going to lose our kids anymore. It's gong to be like the sun for them, just like that for Kaak'achgóok."

One needs to understand, Cruikshank said, that these stories are not simply a heritage from the past but are also a guide to how to act in the future, as well as a commentary about the present.

During her second talk, Cruikshank focussed on work she had done in Dawson City, with Mary McLeod and Pat Lindgren, elders from different generations, who had differing perspectives on the history of their people.

Mrs. McLeod spoke of tribal ways and lore, almost as if providing a set of instructions, especially when it came to the seclusion of young women who were coming into puberty. There was very little of the personal in her talking, and Cruikshank was left with the impression that the life of the group mattered more than the life of the individual.

Mrs. Lindgren, the daughter of Chief Isaac, was born 23 years later and Cruikshank found her to be a sharp critic of the practices of the early missionaries, in terms of naming and marital practices.

For her, the word "civilization", as it had been used by her father, meant alcohol and violence. It was not used in a positive way.

The other thing she said that Cruikshank found significant was "In my time, this was the first time we had a personal life." This is an observation that reflected a great change in how the people lived and thought of themselves.

"Before that," Cruikshank observed, "she was saying that it was a community life. (I had observed that) Mrs. McLeod did not talk about herself as having a personal life and it made me more aware of what Mrs. McLeod was dong when I heard Pat Lindgren speaking."

Both women made it clear that Dawson was a sort of First Nations melting pot, a place to which people from up and down the rivers came for various reasons, causing a blending of customs and languages.

Reflecting on the significance of the Myth and Medium gathering, Cruikshank concluded,

"If these women were alive today and could see what you're doing, they would be thrilled."

TARA'S BIRDS

The Trickster

The common raven, Corvus corax, is easily identifiable, particularly in regions with no overlapping, similar species. They are a large black bird with a heavy, powerful-looking beak and a long, wedge-shaped tail. Ravens are found in all habitats: from the Arctic coast to forests, mountains and deserts. They are often found in large concentrations in municipal dump sites, communities of people, and at large mammal kills in the wild or along the highway.

Ask anyone who has lived amongst ravens, and you're bound to hear anecdotes that may sound like tall tales, but are most likely true. Ravens are incredibly intelligent and innovative. I've heard it claimed that a raven can tell the difference between a garbage bag full of garbage, and one full of dirty laundry. I've heard stories of them swarming pick-up trucks destined for the dump, and tormenting dog teams in brazen attempts to steal food. I've even heard it argued that ravens use tools, in the way that they place something hardshelled on a roadway, and wait for a passing vehicle to break it

Ravens also have an extensive vocabulary, making at least 30 different, distinct sounds. They are great mimics, making the sounds of knocking, cackling laughter and even dripping water. Their croaking calls can be heard across the distance. Juveniles will alert one another to the presence of a fresh carcass. Adult ravens are more territorial, and are likely to keep their finds to themselves.

Ravens figure largely in First Nation culture, history and mythology. Here in the Yukon, the First Nations are divided into two matrilineal groups: Wolf and Crow (Raven). Ravens are a common theme in traditional regalia and dances. The raven also plays a part in creation mythology, and is often referred to as the Trickster.

Hill Packs the Library for His Reading

One of the first things that Lawrence Hill did after arriving at Berton House was to sit down at his laptop and finish the first draft of his latest novel, The Illegal. At his public reading in the Dawson Community Library on March 15 he treated a good sized audience of about 40 people to a couple of chapters from this book, but asked that no one should say much about it as it was still about a year from actually being published.

It's safe to say that it does deal with the problem of illegal immigrants hiding out in a country that doesn't want them. And it's safe to say that Larry, who is a jogger, could apply some of his personal knowledge to one of the central characters. The book is set slightly in the future and deals with relationships in a couple of countries that don't actually

"It's intended to be sort of Orwellian," he told his audience.

Of greater local interest would be the plans he has for his next novel, plans that will require him to come back to the Yukon and experience all its seasons. His attention has been captured by the story of the African American soldiers who were sent north to build the Alaska Highway during World War II, and he already has a sort of general plan for research in mind.

Hill's consuming interest in fiction and non-fiction is to deal with the stories of people of African descent, whether they are full blood or mixed race. As one of the latter sort himself, as chronicled in his memoir, Black Berry, Sweet Juice: On Being Black and White in Canada, he naturally pursues topics that end up with titles like Trials and Triumphs: The Story of African-Canadians, and Women of Vision: The Story of the Canadian Negro Women's Association.

The central character of background, and seems to have drawn on some of his personal reactions and experiences, while still being fiction.

His most recent novel, The Book of Negroes, had phenomenal success, was long listed for the Giller Prize and won the 2007 Rogers Writers' Trust Fiction Prize, the 2008 Evergreen Award (presented

Lawrence Hill packed the Library. and revealed that he has a plan for a book set on the Ontario Library Association) and the 2009 Canada Reads competition. More significantly, it won him the 2008 Commonwealth Writers' Prize, and an audience with Queen Elizabeth.

The title, he explained, came from an actual historical document, the one that listed and authenticated the right of Black Loyalists to come with the British to Canada – mostly to Nova Scotia – after the American Revolution. It did not occur to him that the title would be a problem.

their advance catalogues, only to change the name in a panic after bookstores across the United States informed them that they would not stock the book with that title. In the USA, Australia and New Zealand, it was published as Someone Knows My Name. In translation it is sometimes published as either title, or as the name of the central character, Aminata.

In Holland, the Canadian and UK title was translated directly into Dutch, and a Dutch citizen of Surinamese heritage was so offended that he organized a book burning in protest.

Hill presented two short sections of the book at his reading. The opening framework, in which the octogenarian Aminata, begins to reflect on her life while working with abolitionists in England, is so familiar to him that he hardly needed to look at the pages as he recited it. A Apparently it did not occur to second section came from her an earlier novel, Any Known his American publishers either, arrival as a captured slave in Blood, shares Hill's mixed race as they listed it that way in America, and amusingly (for there can be humour even in such a somber story) recounted her first experience of waking up on a cold day to see frost coming from her mouth.

The audience was very taken with Hill's reading and there was a lively discussion, which took the session well past an

A Trip Outside

Waves roll ashore at Dallas Beach in Victoria, BC

Story & Photos by Lisa McKenna

It all began with trying to get my pets "farmed out", and trying to get a lift to the airport because, as we all know, we no longer have a taxi.

When I arrived at the airport, Air North treated me like gold-they even let me use my cane, which has an ice-lug, to go to my seat, but I had to stow it away so it wouldn't strike anyone in case of an emergency.

EMERGENCY? Why? I was perfectly safe. I could use my seat as a floatation device (kind of like putting parachutes on the BC Ferries!). BUT I must admit the flight attendants and the ground crews were professional.

Once I got "up' to Whitehorse, I was treated with the same amicable courtesy, still allowed my cane with the ice-lug. Being a tad more strict than Dawson, security removed my nail clippers from my key chain!

I was greeted by my friend, Joe, at the Vancouver Airport and we took a room nearby because we had missed the last ferry to Vancouver Island.

Early the next day, we rode a bus to the ferry. I had not been on a ferry in 15 years! I got lost trying to have a smoke, but all in all, to see the sea and waves again - wow.

On the ferry we purchased tickets on a bus that dropped us off one block away from our place where we were going to stay, The Humboldt House!

The Humboldt House is a bed and breakfast, and I'm talking eggs benedict, maple crepes, fresh juice, even coffee if you like it (I was more into their awesome herbal tea selection).

OH! Did I forget to mention the complementary champagne and truffles?

We were the only occupants

Detail of the Lesislative Assembly of British Columbia of the six-roomed house, so we called ourselves "The Duke and Duchess of Humboldt", but we were treated as such.

David, proprietor and chocolatier, joined the family business in 1995 and he started offering truffles to the guests. Word got around and pretty soon people were knocking on his door asking for truffles!

The rooms were themed (I stayed in the Oriental Room). Each room offered a jacuzzi for two, a wood-burning fireplace and a fridge - it was a vacation I will always remember.

Now David and his wife have three kids in addition to the B&B and a truffle shop, and David plays in TWO different bands! (One is rock-a-billy, and the other is more blues.) I wish I still had that energy, but I digress.

I went to the Royal BC Museum, and they had a photo spread that was amazing. My favorite was a picture of a baby ape that stared at the camera with open eyes. He (or she!) > had a face full of wrinkles and old people hands (and they say we are not related?).

Then it was down to the ocean. The sound of the waves CRASHING on the shore - WOW! I collected a sample of sand and seaweed and little stones and brought home, to the Yukon - a dozen smells!

We were going to go on a sailing ship, but the ship captain was getting his lifeboat recertified. It rained every day except for the last one, but rain is just snow with an attitude!

We took the bus back to the ferry and to Vancouver International Airport. I got on my plane, with Air North treating me like gold again, arrived in Whitehorse, spent the night because I had missed the connection, and then I flew back here to Dodge.

What a trip outside!

Design vs. Intelligent Design: Part 1

My opinion today, as indicated by the title, concerns a topic which is defended ferociously by both proponents on either side of this debate.

However, Intelligent Design vs. Evolution is somewhat misleading, as it is my intention to show that Evolution and Intelligent Design are virtually in full agreement in every aspect, save one. The only area wherein these two disagree is in the timeline. Evolution states clearly that it took billions of years for life to evolve, while Intelligent Design teaches that all was created in six days.

In all other aspects the two agree fully.

Since the beginning of man's ability to speak, he told stories about the creation of the world. It is a fact that every culture around the world, all of our ancestors, every ancient civilization, kept records (spoken and written) concerning the birth of our planet, and the emergence of man upon the planet.

One hundred percent of these ancient civilizations agreed on one principle, that the world and all upon it were created by Intelligent Design. This is a Historical Fact, and as such should be included in historical curriculum in all schools, and should be taught along side the Theory of Evolution.

While all of these Intelligent Design creation stories are considered as Myths and Legends, only one accurately describes this creation in the exact evolutionary steps that Evolutionists and indeed Physicists claim occurred. I will divulge the source of this one Intelligent Design Story at the end of this article.

According to many Physicists, including Steven Hawking, the universe began out of nothing, before the Big Bang. According to that one Intelligent Design creation story, "From nothing was everything made that was made."

Physicists also believe following the Big Bang, the universe had no substantial form or shape. Likewise this Intelligent Design story claims, "The earth was without form and void." Then, the scientists claim that the universe was formed as was our planet, but due to extreme amounts of ash, dust and cloud, the earth was dark.

At that time, had one been on the earth, one would not be able to see the sun, moon or stars from any viewpoint upon the earth. While according to this Intelligent Design story, "Darkness was upon the face of the earth."

Then science says that the ash, dust and clouds subsided. As the dust and ash subsided, light could filter through allowing light to brighten the days. Still the sun, moon and stars could not be seen from the earth.

Intelligent Design says, "Let there be light, and there was light."

Science then states that there was a Super Continent which eventually separated becoming the seven continents we have today.

The Intelligent Design story also states, "Let the waters under heaven be gathered together in one place and let dry land appear." One land mass and one super ocean.

This is just my opinion.

Tortoises are a lot like turtles, but they are different.

Some cultures call a tortoise a land turtle, others say they are differentiated by feet or flippers, and still others compare the time the turtle or tortoise spends on dry land.

The tortoise is considered a reptile, just like the turtle, because it is cold-blooded and lays its eggs on land.

The longest living tortoise recorded was known as Tui Malila, and she was brought to the Royal Tongan family by Captain Cook in 1777. She died in 1965 making her a whopping 188 years old.

Another long-living tortoise was brought to England by Charles Darwin. Harriet, as she was affectionately called, lived to be 176.

There are hundreds of different kinds of trees throughout the world.

The oldest tree known is a bristlecone. These trees grow in California and it is known that they are almost 5,000 years old! That makes them the oldest living organism on Earth!

The banyan is a base tree. Originally from India, it has a base that can take up to 10 minutes to walk around. In a 1719 novel by Daniel Defoe, Robinson Crusoe lives within a banyan.

Coastal redwoods are the tallest trees. In 2006 one was measured to be 16 meters tall (380 feet), making it the tallest plant on Earth! The largest trees on Earth in terms of volume are the giant sequoias of Sierra Nevada, but in Central America, the monkey pod tree can have a canopy of over 60 meters (200 feet).

The smallest tree is the Northern Dwarf Willow which can reach a massive height of six cm (two inches)!

Turtles are reptiles that have a very hard shell surrounding their body. This shell is formed out of the turtles ribs and its function is to protect the turtle.

Like all other reptiles, a turtle is cold-blooded. This means that the turtle must regulate its body temperature with outside influences, such as basking in the sun when it feels cold, or diving into the water or seeking shade when it feels hot.

Turtle remains suggest that the turtle has been around for 215 MILLION years - that's older than snakes, crocodiles and even the Komodo dragon!

The largest turtle is the leatherback sea turtle - it can reach up to two meters (six and a half feet) long. The smallest turtle is the speckled padloper - it only ever reaches about eight cm (three inches).

Turtles are thought to have really good night vision. Land turtles have their eyes pointing down towards the ground to see were they are going, but water turtles have their eyes more towards the tops of their heads so they can hide in the shallows and still see around.

Turtles have claws but no TEETH! They have rigid beaks instead. A meat eating turtle will have really sharp edges on its beak for cutting through the meat. Vegetarian turtles have serrated edges on thier beaks, like a steak knife, for cutting through tough stems.

AND a turtle cannot stick out its tongue!

AND they can't breathe like we do. Instead they swallow the air because their hard shell makes their lungs unable to expand or contract!

When you think of a triangle, you may think of the classic pyramid or your basic right angle triangle (when one side is straight up and down). BUT there are many, many more types.

In all triangles, the three angles always add up to 180°, they all have three sides and three angles.

There is the equilateral triangle that has three equal sides and three equal angles.

There is the isosceles triangle that has only two equal sides and two equal angles.

There is the right triangle that has one angle at 90°.

AND, last but not least, there is the scalene triangle that still only has three sides, but none of the sides are equal in length and all three corners have different angles.

BUT it goes on and on - you can find triangles all through nature. Look at a snowflake or a spider's web - even a shark's tooth is triangular! There are plants, like the yellow nutsedge that have three sided stalks. Even the sections of oranges, lemons and limes are basically triangular.

Have you ever made a house of cards? It's all done with triangles! Try it some day and see how many cards YOU can use.

Important Notice regarding Business Licenses

Note: Renewal Applications have been mailed out

All Business License renewal applications, along with full payment, must be received by the City of Dawson Office on or before March 31th, 2012. A license and receipt of payment will be mailed to you upon approval of your renewal. Late renewal applications will be considered a new license application and will be subject to the full fee being $100.00 for the first license, and $50.00 for an additional license. Incomplete applications will not be accepted. Additional fines and penalties may apply should businesses be found operating without a valid business license.

For further information regarding this matter, please feel free to contact the City Office at 993-7400.

THE CITY OF DAWSON

PLEASE BE ADVISED THAT THE CITY WOULD APPRECIATE IT IF THERE ARE NO VEHICLES LEFT PARKED ON THE SIDE OF THE ROAD ALL SEASON LONG. IT MAKES IT VERY DIFFICULT FOR THE GRADER OPERATOR TO DO THEIR JOB WITH VEHICLES IN THE WAY AND IT IS ALSO A CONTRAVENTION OF THE TRAFFIC BYLAW.

THIS YEAR THE CITY WILL BE TOWING ALL VEHICLES LEFT ON THE SIDE OF THE ROAD, ESPECIALLY DURING SNOW REMOVAL SEASON, AND ALL COSTS WILL BE INCURRED TO THE OWNER. WE HOPE TO HAVE EVERYONE'S COOPERATION ON THIS MATTER.

RESIDENTIAL SOLID WASTE RECEPTACLE RELOCATION

The City of Dawson wishes to provide a safer and more efficient solid waste collection service. Collection in the alleys has proven to be difficult and at times unsafe due to the limited width of our alleys. Because of this, the City of Dawson has commenced a program to aid residents in moving their receptacles to locations adjacent to streets and avenues. The City will be contacting residents to aid in this transition. For more information, please contact the City office at 993-7400.
