Placer Miner Ordered to Pay Damages to Dawson

By Ainslie Cruickshank,
Whitehorse Star, July 23

The Yukon Supreme Court has ordered a Dawson City miner to pay the town between $28,222 and $46,890 in damages for a trespass claim filed in 2010.

But Dawson will be responsible for its own legal fees.

The town brought the action against Darrel Carey, an area placer miner and owner of the Slinky mine.

Carey's mine falls within municipal boundaries. It includes portions of two highways, the Dome Road and the Mary McLeod Road.

According to the decision document released last week by Justice Ron Veale, Carey removed trees and organics from an area where the two roads intersect in April 2010.

One hundred and sixty squared metres were cleared within 10 metres of the Mary McLeod Road centreline, 1950 sq. m were within 30 m of the centreline, 310 sq. m were within 30 m of the Dome Road centreline and 1013 sq. m were within 40 m of the Dome Road centreline.

Between June and August 2010, Carey removed 483 cu. m of granular material from within 30 m of the Dome Road and 1,115 cu. m from within 40 m of the same road.

Both the Dome Road and the Mary McLeod Road are classified as Class V highways under the Highways Act. That means a 60-m right-of-way or road allowance is imposed on them under the act.

Carey's defence was that his Yukon Water Board licence required a leave strip of between only 10 and 15 metres from the centre of each road.

Veale found that "the miner cannot rely upon the Water Use Licences and their leaves strip conditions to operate within the 60-metre right-of-way of the roads."

Veale notes in his decision that the Waters Act says "nothing in this act, the regulations, or a licence authorizes a person to contravene or fail to comply with any other act or any regulation or order made under it, except as provided in that other act, regulation, or order."

Dawson was awarded $2,200 for hydro seeding where Carey removed trees and organics and between $26,022 and $44,690 to replace the granular material he removed depending on whether it can be recovered from the placer mine or if it must be obtained from other sources.

In a second decision document, Veale ordered the town to pay its own legal fees, where normally Carey would have been responsible for covering the town's costs.

Veale reasons that while he ultimately ruled in favour of the town, counsel for Carey had been "ambushed" when counsel for the town raised section 18(1) of the Placer Act "at the last minute."

Veale calls it "wholly inappropriate and unfair.

"The fair and proper procedure would have been to raise the new issue of s. 18(1) or the request to file a new argument at case management, so that each party could prepare arguments to address the new issue," he says in the decision document.

Section 18(1) of the Placer Act maintains that a miner cannot enter on lands legally occupied by someone else "until adequate security is given, to the satisfaction of the mining recorder for any loss or damage that may be caused."

"There is little doubt here that the city is in lawful occupation of the Dome Road and the Mary McLeod Road," Veale says in his original decision document.

Counsel for Carey admitted no security was posted but argued it was the town's responsibility to pursue security.

"In my view, s. 18(1) can only be interpreted to require that the miner provide security to the satisfaction of the mining recorder before entering on land lawfully occupied by the city," Veale says.

As a result of the late submission, Veale says "in the normal course ... the city would recover its costs and reasonable disbursements from the miner, unless the court otherwise orders. I am ordering otherwise in this case.

"Each party shall be responsible for their legal fees and disbursements."

Moosehide Gathering Drenched but Not Dispirited at Thursday Night Opening

By Dan Davidson

Even the most careful planning cannot dictate what the weather will bring to the party, and opening evening of the 11th Moosehide Gathering may end up going down in history as the wettest ever, as the sky opened up and delivered a wind driven downpour.

Small tents were overturned and large canopies rocked with the wind, while a crew of drenched workers struggled in vain to erect a canvas tent for the children to play in.

Opening ceremonies intended for the open space in front of the Harbour were moved inside, and volunteers scrambled to bring in benches and folding chairs that had been set up outside before the events could begin.

William Greenland was once again the emcee for the event, as he has been for the last two. He introduced TH Elder and Anglican Deacon Percy Henry, who offered an opening prayer.

This part of the ceremony included the rededication of an ancient gunhawk (or dancing stick), which Henry said went back hundreds of years, to a time before the Gold Rush.

"Now we're gonna bring it back to Dawson; that's where it come from."

For this part of the ceremony he was joined by elder Ron Johnson, known locally as the Mayor of Moosehide. The pair paraded the gunhawk around the large circle and concluded by leading out the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Singers, who provided several numbers to welcome the visitors and citizens to the gathering.

As they concluded their set of tunes the rain let up and ended, and the crowd was able to go outside for the flag raising ceremony (with a 12 gun salute from the Rangers) and the lighting of the sacred fire, which is intended to burn through the weekend.

There followed a series of speeches by local and visiting dignitaries: Chief Taylor, Allison Kormendy & Kyrie Nagano, Deputy Chief and Elder Clara (Sis) Van Bibber, Council for Yukon First Nations Grand Chief Ruth Massie, Assembly of First Nations Yukon Regional Chief Mike Smith, and Klondike MLA Sandy Silver.

It had been intended that the Tanacross Singers would perform that evening, but Greenland announced that they had been unable to cross the border into Canada.

The Kaska Drummers took up the challenge of keeping the gathering moving with their drumming and singing until it was nearly time for the evening feast.

The next three days will be filled with more singing, dancing, drumming, workshops and other events until the closing ceremonies at noon after the Sunday church service.

Uffish Thoughts: A Walking Tour Along the Dike

Story & Photo
By Dan Davidson

There are a number of ways to enjoy an informed walk around Dawson City if you are new to the place. There are Parks Canada walking tours, both guided and recorded (with accompanying booklets), or you can just walk around and read all the Parks and National Historic Sites and Monuments Board plaques that can be found on just about every street.

Parks' plaques are literally all over the place, on just about every avenue, while the greatest concentration of HSMB plaques is along Front Street, with several on the grounds at the Commissioner's Residence.

Most of the plaques at the residence celebrate the lives of famous Dawson citizens, such as Martha Black or J.B. Tyrell (whose dinosaur findings in Alberta were later the beginning of the Tyrell Museum in Drumheller). A trio of other key individuals - George Dawson, Jack McQueston and Joseph Ladue - have privately financed plaques affixed to three boulders at the top of the path through Mary Hanulik Gardens, just off Front Street.

One of the newest ways to get a sense of the town and its geography is to walk the dike that has protected us from potential spring flooding since 1987. The town was flooded many times during the 20th century, with two of the earliest bad floods being in 1925 and 1944. The first serious attempt at a dyke was to build up Front Street (which is actually part of the Klondike Highway) in 1959. It failed and that caused the street to be raised again in 1968. That didn't work either.

As is well known, the massive flood of 1979 showed that something better had to be done. This was finally addressed in a territorial government report entitled "The Dawson City Dyke Improvements Project" in 1986, which led directly to the present dyke (as it used to be spelled in all the official documents) being built in 1987.

After years of complaints that this very necessary barrier had somehow divorced us from our history beside the Yukon River, a group of concerned citizens formed the Take Back the River committee and began to plan for a waterfront revival in 2010. It took a while to come up with a plan and access the necessary funds, but the end result was a new look with a number of additions and adjustments to existing paths and structures.

Most of the improvements were in place by the end of last summer, including a town clock, reorientation of the Front Street Gazebo, extensive landscaping and a combination picnic shelter / events shelter next to the open air vendors'

Summer visitors stop to learn more about the geography and history of Dawson City.

In addition, to focus attention on the river, several viewing platforms were installed along the dike walk last summer and this year a dozen attractive and informative illustrated plaques were added to the platforms.

This summer visitor can stroll along the dike and stop to read lots of material (but not too much) about both the river and the town.

The topics include Dawson's Waterfront, the Moosehide Slide, the Yukon River, the Dawson Dike, Floods in Dawson, Permafrost in Dawson City (2 plaques), Freeze Up and Break Up, the Government Reserve, the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in, the Klondike River, and Tr'ochëk.

Added to earlier displays further north on the walk - on a platform behind the S.S. Keno and also at the memorial to the Princess Sophia - there's a lot of reading to be done on a simple stroll beside the river.

Oil Pipeline Risk Outweighs Benefits

By Andre Carrel, Terrace Standard, May 9, 2012

I had one of the most memorable experiences in municipal management in the early years of my career in Dawson City, Yukon.

Dawson City had experienced repeated floods since its establishment in 1896, mostly as a result of ice jamming the Yukon River during spring run-off. Exceptionally severe floods occurred in 1925 and 1944.

A protective dyke, designed on the basis of flood data collected up to that time, was constructed in 1959. The very next year, in 1960, a massive ice jam caused the Yukon River to rise to a level never before measured and Dawson City was flooded again.

In response to that flood Dawson City's protective dyke was raised in 1968.

On May 3, 1979 (I was city manager in Dawson City at the time) ice jammed up in the Yukon River, roughly six miles downstream of Dawson City, raising the water level to new record heights, and the City suffered its worst flood ever.

When Dawson City Council and the Yukon Government planned the dyke built in 1959, could they have imagined what would happen within a year of building that dyke?

By 1968, with the experience of having underestimated the flood potential of ice jams in the Yukon River, was the decision to raise the dyke four feet higher than the highest flood level ever recorded reasonable?

As the events of May 3, 1979, proved beyond any doubt is that it was not. Had there been any way for anyone to know how high the Yukon River could rise as a result of an ice jam, surely the dyke would have been designed and built accordingly.

The question is: can we know the future?

The Fukushima nuclear power plant (in Japan) was at first to be built on a bluff 35 metres above sea level. But that bluff was lowered by 25 metres so the reactors could be built against solid bedrock. It would also be cheaper to run the pumps providing seawater which acted as a coolant.

It's obvious today that had the engineers, the plant's owners or the government known what they came to know on March 11, 2011 when a tsunami struck, the plant's design would have been different.

What Donald Rumsfeld famously called the "unknown unknowns" are things which, after lengthy investigations into the causes of incidents, accidents, and disasters, appear to be obvious, causes that, with the benefit of hindsight, should have been predictable.

The consequences to some of the incidents I have referred to were limited in time and scope. The consequences for others, such as the Exxon Valdez, the Deepwater Horizon and the Fukushima nuclear power plant disaster, expanded and extended far beyond the location and time of the incident itself.

Some incidents, the Exxon Valdez and Costa Concordia shipwrecks for example, were caused by human neglect. Others, such as the Fukushima disaster and the Deepwater Horizon, and quite possibly the two recent saw mill explosions in British Columbia, were the result of inadequate or inappropriate facility design, construction, or maintenance — the Rumsfeld factor.

The risk exposure of the proposed Enbridge project belongs to the same class as the Fukushima power plant project and the Deepwater Horizon. If there is a disaster, the consequences will not be limited in time and location as they are following a train accident or an ice jam. The consequences of crude oil spilling into one of this region's rivers or British Columbia's coastal waters cannot be foretold. We cannot KNOW the circumstances, likelihood, or the full extent of such an event.

We do know that the transfer of oil, by pipeline, by ship, by train, by truck — by any means for that matter — cannot be made 100 percent spill-proof. Whatever safety and security provisions may be proposed by Enbridge and regulatory agencies, the project, if approved, WILL carry a risk of incidents whose consequences cannot be fixed, corrected, or compensated for with money.

The reasonable and therefore the only responsible conclusion is that no amount of money or economic benefit the Enbridge project may promise today can outweigh and overcome the cost of the risks linked to that project.

Andre Carrel is a retired public sector administrator living in Terrace, was once Dawson's City Manager and later our YTG appointed Financial Supervisor. The above is an edited version of his presentation to the federal panel reviewing Enbridge's Northern Gateway pipeline plan.

Wedding Bells are Ringing

Story & Illustration
By Lisa McKenna

This the season of joy and rebirth. This is the season for love. This is the season for families from all over the Yukon and points unknown to get together. This is the season of weddings!

The latest spectacular wedding was between Lisa Linklater and Jason Van Fleet, a merging of two powerful Northern families.

Walter Van Fleet was the proud father of the groom though he didn't like his 'monkey suit'. Personally I though he looked mighty fine, even though it took awhile to recognize him!

Lisa's (the bride) mother was present as well and alternately laughed or cried but she was so proud I am surprised she didn't burst!

The arena thronged with children all dressed in smiles. There were little boys in cowboy hats playing with balloons and little girls dressed up in their Sunday best. There were hippies in headbands, truckers, miners and Elders too.

A feast was served which consisted of turkey, moose, caribou, buns, bannock, every type of salad known to man, and beverages, there were over 200 people and the dance was packed even more!

So all the best to Lisa and Jason, they definitely started off on the right foot. Lisa and Jason, love each other, cherish your moments together, accept each other's faults as well as their blessings, learn from each other and teach the (future) children well.

Congratulations!!!!!!

ROACHE'S CORNER BY MIKE ROACHE

The Patrons of the Fest

By Lisa McKenna

Last year I hung out with the Stampeders, this year I hung out with the visitors of the music fest. Talking to Heinz, from Germany, he states that he didn't understand the music but he loved to watch the people's joy and he also loved the beer! He comes from just outside of Munich, where they love their music and beer; not being very far from Bavaria, this goes without question.

Francois and his young squeeze, Anna, were fresh from Quebec and they loved every part of the festival, especially the long summer days. They weren't looking forward to going back to school but they really did not want to suffer our winter. Suffer our winter! Doesn't it get really miserable in the winter in Quebec? I think most people are scared of the North, which is good. It keeps Dawson and its festivals a unique event.

Art's daughter came all the way across Canada to see the festival but she was so intrigued by the town's character, the old slanted buildings, the Yukon river, the Pit, that she had to admit she never even made it to the grounds!

There was an air of merriment in the air and I don't think any one came away unsatisfied (except one gentleman (?) I spoke to who could not wait to get back to Toronto and "civilization". Poor dude.

Steve, from South Dakota, thought that "we all Canadians are pretty friendly" and he is coming back next year, and the year after, and the year after...

All in all, I think this music fest was a hit with the tourists and they all seem to want to come back. That's how it is in Dawson City; once you arrive it's hard to leave, and if you leave you will always return. C'est la vie.

34th Annual Dawson City Music Festival Keeps the Chain Intact

by Dan Davidson

It was surprising to learn that there are people who don't know about the Sunday Night Rule at the Dawson City Music Festival. Granted that the crowd on the dance floor was really enjoying the set by the Born Ruffians and didn't want it to end, but they were the next to last act of the night on the last night of the festival and when it gets to that point in the evening, no amount of chanting "ONE! MORE! SONG!" in loud angry voices is going to produce an encore.

All it's going to do is shorten the amount of actual music you get from the very last act of the festival, the Bruce Peninsula.

On Friday and Saturday night the fun goes on until 2 a.m., but on Sunday all the coaches turn back into pumpkins at midnight - because the neighbours have to go to work the next day.

That final act was quite different from the rockers that had preceded them, but they quickly convinced the crowd that they were worth listening and dancing to, so it all worked out in the end.

The outlook for the whole weekend was a little iffy on Friday, as the "crack-o-doom" style storm in the wee hours of the morning convinced the CBC folk that their Front Street Gazebo concert would have to move inside the Odd Fellows Hall instead.

Of course the day got steadily better as it wore on and the ballroom was a sweatbox by the time that it was too late to change their minds and move the equipment back outdoors.

The Weather Station, Old Time Machine and The Deep Dark Words played from a cramped stage to a ballroom packed to standing room only capacity.

The rest of the weekend vacillated from cool to hot and steamy, with a bit of smoke late Saturday and Sunday reputed to be from a fire down river in the direction of Forty Mile.

Visiting musicians are always blown away by the long twilight here, but a month after Solstice it does actually get dark if you stay up long enough, and by midnight it can be a little murky in the tent. Watching a quartet of hacky sack diehards trying to play with a dark little foot bag they could hardly see was an amusing reminder of that.

The festival could be said to have begun the night before at the Palace Grand Theatre, when Molly Sweeny and her accompanist, Sheena Ko, opened for Ron Sexsmith and his keyboard player Dave Matheson in a show before an absolutely packed house that ran to about two and half hours in total.

Main Stage opened on Friday night with the TrondekHwëch'in Singers, in what has become a tradition here over the last several years. The rest of the evening worked a progression from listening music in a roots vein to dancing tunes as the evening wore on. This is the way the three main stage evenings generally move, from quieter music to increasingly frenetic, although front-loading the Sunday concert with the energetically blistering neo-metal sounds of Zipline was a departure from this style of programming.

For those more interested in sitting and listening, there were concerts at the Palace Grand on Saturday and Sunday and one at St. Paul's Anglican Church on Saturday night.

Saturday morning was occupied by the KidsFest, hosted by funnyman and Certified Lunatic and Master of the Impossible, Tomas Kubinek, with music by Blue Hibou and lots of games.

Music was happening all over town on Saturday and Sunday, with events at Minto Park, the Palace Grand, the Dänojà Zho Cultural Centre, St. Paul's, and the Front Street Gazebo. Some of these events were little mini-concerts lasting 15 minutes to an hour, other were themed workshop style events with names like Women of the World, Take Over; Freshly Pickled; In Chorus; and Who's the Boss (featuring the songs of Bruce Springsteen).

A favorite Sunday feature was the Potluck session, where band members were mixed and matched into new groups and told to cover a tune as best they could.

The energy built over the weekend, leading to a heartfelt climax at the Finale, when all the bands hit the stage and churned out a version of Fleetwood Mac's 1976 hit "The Chain", with its exhortation to "never break the chain."

Festival Director Jenna Roebuck ended the weekend with what has become the traditional send-off: "You don't have to go home - but you can't stay here."

However, it was a beautiful evening outside the tent and people in the crowd continued visiting for some time after the tent flaps closed behind them.

Brandon Isaac proved to be a lively player of many varieties of the Blues, and invited George McConkey to join him for a couple of tunes.

Bruce Peninsula faced the tough task of winning over an annoyed audience as the last act on Sunday night.

Fans pleaded to have an encore from the Born Ruffians on Sunday night.

Whoa Bear played an acoustic set in the Beer Garden.

The Dakkhá Khwáan Dancers, were joined by some members of the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Singers for part of their set.

Old Time Machine (Ryan McNally and Kyle Cashen) played to an overheated ballroom during the CBC kickoff concert on Friday.

The Art Gate Show

By Palma Berger

The ``Gate`` was opened and all sorts of creative ideas flowed out. This was the showing of the works by local and non-Canadian artists, all of whom had spent a couple of days viewing the Bear Creek Compound. Their art was drawn from the inspiration they found in the surroundings of old machinery, old buildings, and old ways of doing things, and all that was left after the gold seeking dredges closed down.

The event was organised by Greg Hakonson, Karen Dubois, Reinald Nohal, and Rian Lougheed-Smith, the DCAS member who arranged it all with Parks Canada.

Reinald Nohal, from Germany, had "discovered" Dawson in the 90's. In 1995 he built the Bunkhouse, which he considers a work of art in itself. Here artists from Europe came to visit.. As he said, "It was my own artist-in-residence programme."

He installed Martin Kippenberger's "Subway"; though it is now dismantled and to be installed in an Art Museum in Seattle. Always he had this interest in art, so it was natural for him to join up with Karen, Rian and Greg, and go with the idea of attracting artists from further afield to share with local (as in Canadian) artists.

The Bear Creek Compound

was opened for the occasion..

Together, they gathered artists from around the world. Reinald listed the overseas ones. These were as follows :

- His wife Irmelin Nohal, a former opera singer, and a very talented designer and painter.
- Daniela von Armin of Germany, his personal assistant
- Sonia von Brocke, a poetess and photographer, from Germany..
- Travis Farmen, artist and painter from Los Angeles.
- Jochen Lengenfelder of Berlin, an actor and a performing artist
- Leon Schultze, of Cologne. He excels in two fields.- as an art student and as a goal keeper for his soccer team.
- Hans-Peter Thomas, a.k.a. `Bara`an artist from Berlin and Los Angeles. (He is so thrilled with Dawson that he is planning to move here)
- Henry Vincent, an artist from Los Angles.
- Thomas Winkler, artist and musician, from Germany.
- Rikke Aamann-Christianen – from Denmark and Berlin, a painter and photographer. She has been to Dawson three times already, staying at the Bunkhouse each time.

At the end of our conversation Reinald revealed that there has been a three day "secret mission" in the bush, whereabouts not yet revealed. This will result in a photo documentation movie which will be shown next year.

Coming to See How Dawson Blooms

By Carly Lovett
Student Intern

"People plants and pride..... growing together" (slogan for Communities In Bloom)

Last week, maybe without your knowledge, you were being judged; you and the entire community of Dawson underwent intense scrutiny. Your civic involvement was evaluated on a national level, measured against people in towns as far away as Prince Edward Island! I sure hope you were on your best behavior.

This year, for the fourth time, Dawson City played host to Communities in Bloom (CIB). Communities in Bloom is a non-profit organization that has been running in Canada since 1995. It was created to assess the livability of towns and cities and to encourage municipalities to focus on qualities that make them more attractive. Towns and cities are evaluated on the basis of eight elements: Tidiness, Environmental Action, Heritage Conservation, Urban Forestry, Landscape, Turf and Groundcovers, Floral Displays and Community Involvement. Each element is given equal weight in the evaluation. In last year's judging, Dawson received five blooms in the national category.

The Judges evaluating Dawson this year were Lucy Chang of Edmonton, Alberta, and Roger Younker of Charlottetown, PEI. Chang and Younker were given a whirlwind tour of Dawson and its attractions. Their visit began on Monday July 30th when they were brought to a show at Diamond Tooth Gerties. On Tuesday they woke early and visited locations all over Dawson and its environs, learning and judging as they went. Their itinerary included a downtown walking tour, a visit to the Danoja Zho Cultural Centre and the community gardens, where they were served a lunch of locally caught salmon and vegetables from the garden, prepared by Katie English. They toured the city's green spaces and the Crocus Bluff Trail system, visited the Dawson City Museum, went to tea at the Commissioners Residence and finally, rounded out their day with a visit to the Klondike Valley Nursery.

It's really about "community spirit in bloom" said Younker and city recreation manager Lana Welchman, eagerly quoting a favorite line from judge Chang.

Welchman acted as director of this year's tour. She says that the Communities in Bloom project is a great way to showcase all that organizations and individuals have done to enhance the town. A dream of hers would be for community groups to reach a higher level of coordination among themselves. She believes this to be possible, especially with the encouragement of a program like CIB.

"People make the mistake of thinking that it's all about flowers," says judge Chang.

"But it's the people that make it all tick and bring it all together," adds judge Younker.

Younker and Welchman were both eager to quote a favorite line of Chang's when describing the contest, saying it's really about "community spirit in bloom".

HUMANE SOCIETY DAWSON

Hello! My name is Burger, and I am a 9

Burger is a lovely dog. He has a great temperament and is extremely smart. When Burger goes for walks, he is great on and off a leash and naturally heels right beside you. Burger is very friendly and gets along with all the dogs that come in and out of the shelter. He loves attention and aims to please. Come out to the shelter to take him for a walk and see for yourself.

"The most beautiful finish line in the world"

by Joanie Veitch

It's a gruelling run that climbs 1,852 feet in just over seven kilometres. It's amazing that anybody even considers it, but they do - and in growing numbers every year.

One hundred and ninety-six people registered at Diamond Tooth Gerties to participate in the 15th annual Midnight Dome race. Twenty-four of those were walkers, another record number.

It's a long, hard push to the top beginning at the Palace Grand Theatre and continuing up behind Dawson to the Midnight Dome that overlooks the town on the old road that used to be called the A.C. road as it was built by the Alaska Commercial Company.

That company probably didn't expect the road would become such a beacon to runners such as Brian Bell of Whitehorse who almost set a course record with his first place win finishing in 32:16.

"I was four seconds off the course record," he said sounding a bit disappointed. "It was a personal best though, and you always have to be pleased with a personal best time."

Dave Brook, also from Whitehorse, took second place with a time of 33:53.

He was followed by Brent Langbakk who came in at 34:09.

In the women's category Dawson's Jane Vincent once again proved her endurance making it to the top in great shape at 40:25. She placed 33rd overall. Vincent was followed closely by Tamara Goepel with a time of 41:00 and Michelle Toews who took third place at 45:38.

In the Masters Men's Division (39 years of age and over) Don White of Whitehorse captured first with 35:43. Hajo Brumond, also of Whitehorse, came in be-

Discovery Days' focus shifts

by Dan Davidson

The many changes in the organization of Discovery Days Weekend this year are aimed at improving the quality, duration and atmosphere of the event, says committee member Peter Menzies, Dawson's Recreation Director.

Beginning this year, and continuing up until the centennial celebrations, the organizing committee wants the celebration to take on the reputation of being a quality family event, as free as possible of the problems that have plagued some years, and sustained throughout the weekend.

One major shift is a change in the Saturday parade route. This year it will begin at the Fire Hall and end at the Visitor's Reception Centre on Front Street. This moves the event away from

Considering the Rise and Possible Fall of the West

By Niall Ferguson
Penguin Press
432 pages
$40.50

The temptation to evaluate the narrative of history according to our current circumstances has been with us for a long time. The Big Thinkers of the Renaissance and the Enlightenment (or Age of Reason) looked back on the period between them and the fall of the Roman Empire as the Dark Ages, judging that it had taken that many centuries to overcome the cultural deficit.

came out with his analysis of the state of the world, The End of History and the Last Man, in which he held up Western Civilization (especially the American flavour) as the end product towards which all the world was moving inexorably. While he modified his views in a later book, the basic idea is one that has been popular with western historians over the centuries, as if the development of societies was an evolutionary process with our way of doing things the final stage.

Our own Gwynne Dyer has

These days we usually just talk about the Middle Ages and skip the negative connotations. Passing judgment has tended to fall out of fashion.

But not always.

Shortly after the fall of the Soviet Union and George Bush the First's announcement of the New World Order, Francis Fukayama advanced the theory that some form of democracy (not necessarily quite the way we practice it) is on the rise in the world and is slowly displacing various other forms of government. To some degree, parts of what happened during the so-called Arab Spring seemed to justify his faith, though he had to be disappointed that there was quite so much violence in what he has tended to expect to be a peaceful revolution.

Jared Diamond offered a different interpretation, and the very title of his book, Guns, Germs and Steel, reveals the technological and geographical factors which he believed were crucial to the ascendancy the West has enjoyed over the rest of the world for the last 400 to 500 years.

Niall Ferguson covers much the same ground in this book, but uses a computer-generated metaphor to put forth his theory. In his view Western Culture was blessed with seven "killer applications" that put it out front in the race for economic and cultural primacy in the world.

These concepts, or apps, are: competition, science, the rule of law, consumerism, modern medicine, and the work ethic. While he devotes a chapter to each one of them, he also demonstrates a degree of inter-connectivity which, to my mind is rather like a Venn diagram. The overlapping circles only result in the world we have today when they all overlap.

Europe was a hotbed of competition because it was full of squabbling nations whereas the vast landmass that was China began to stagnate under the centralized control that did not encourage diverging views. Thus the wonder of the East, which was so far ahead of the West around 1300, had fallen far behind by the 20th century.

The Arab lands were once well ahead of Europe in terms of science and math, but religious repression of learning far more stringent than any scientific delays the Christian Church may have caused in Europe, froze all further development after the Middle Ages.

The development of the Rule of Law changed the way nations were governed, and while it may have been a concept that dated back to Hammurabi, most of the world did not embrace it, and a good deal of it still has not.

Advances in modern medicine came from the West. This may have been in part because western doctors were trying to find ways for Caucasians to survive in climates for which they were unsuited but it benefitted everyone in the long run. However, people of European stock got a big head start at being healthier and living longer than most of the world's population.

Perhaps the most controversial app in the bundle is his contention that Christianity produces the kind of work ethic (sociologist Max Weber called it the Protestant Ethic, but it's more than that) that causes people to be more productive and work to improve their lot in life.

I note that most reviewers of this book leave off the religious connection when they list the apps and just talk about productivity, but Ferguson doesn't, and goes so far as to suggest that the current state of decline in the West is directly related to a decline in religious observance, particularly in Europe.

The last thing he tackles is consumerism, and particularly as it relates to textiles and clothing manufacture. The degree to which other nations copy the styles of the West is, he says, a good measure of how much they are prepared to copy all the other killer apps to make changes in their societies.

I freely admit that this last bit sounds a little too much like the note sounded in Charles Reich's 1970 book The Greening of America (in which freeing one's ankles in bell-bottoms was seen as an act of psychic liberation) for me to be quite comfortable with it, but the way he develops his argument makes sense. Textile manufacturing was one of the first fruits of the Industrial Revolution in nearly every nation. Turkey and Japan, which both made major efforts to Westernize in the early 20th Century, signaled their intentions by adopting Western styles of dress.

This is a fascinating book. You could be put off by the title, but once into it you realize he is developing an argument about why the West is losing ground and why the Rest are catching up, and that changes the meaning of the title quite a bit.

A Place to Call Home

By Carly Lovett
Student Intern

Have you ever wondered where the young transient workers live? You know, the ones who stay for the summer and maybe a winter or two, working in the local bars or the recycling centre. Most of them are not your neighbors and yet all of them

Mount Homestead is a collection of photos of Bowes' friends and acquaintances in front of the places they have found to live in. Beneath the photos Bowes lists the names of the residents, their residential status (summer or year-round resident), the price of rent and the available amenities as well as the estimated square footage and property

Romance Capital, a recent collaborative art show, reflecting the search for shelter in the north, held at the Confluence Gallery in June 2012, as well as from her experience looking for a place to stay during her time in Dawson and her observations of friends going through the same struggle.

Bowes' passion for the North has led her to explore the balance between creativity and limitation that exists here.

"There is a lack of understanding of how to build in the north, of how much it costs to live build and eat," says Bowes.

Restrictions on availability of housing have led people to make their lives in strange and interesting places. Bowes project currently includes images of a trailer, a wall tent and two rooms at the Pit (the Westminster Hotel) where her friends have managed to build their own small, often makeshift, nests.

Bowes looks at her work, not as a commentary, but describes it as "a portrait of housing in Northern Canada," a mere reflection of the realities of housing in the north and primarily in Dawson City.

"I'm looking for 'average situations,' a general reflection of the present reality," says Bowes, who is currently on the lookout for more submissions.

Mount Homestead is an ongoing project. Once she has enough images, Bowes intends to submit the project to various art journals and magazines as well as some Canadian fact and fiction, literary magazines.

Margaret Bowes is currently based in Dawson, she spends her time working two jobs, expanding her art practice and, these days, looking for a place of her own in which to stay.

For more information on the project Mount Homestead or to submit your housing situation (Bowes will personally come and photograph you in front of your residence) contact Margaret Bowes at hello@margaretbowes.com.

Live and Let Live: Pt. 3 of 4

The Native peoples had no rights whatsoever. In India, it was illegal for a non-white person to walk on the sidewalks in their own country. This was done under the guise that the Brits were making life better for the Native people; after all, they brought Christianity to the "savages". I wonder who the Savages really were, the Natives who were respectful for the most part, or the Brits who treated the Natives like filth. Yes, the Natives rebelled, and finally, under the leadership of Mahatma Gandhi, the people of India united in a peaceful resistance and eventually won their freedom.

They are the only Nation in the world to successfully overthrow an occupying force without assistance from any other Nation. Yes, India suffered internal insurrections, and several instances of near war, which continue to this day, but they take care of business alone. No help from the West is wanted nor required. When Britain left India, the sub-continent became divided, an event called the Partition. Where the populace held a majority of Muslims, became the Country of Pakistan, and where Hindus held a majority, remained India. As a result, Pakistan is a country divided, half is in the North Western part of the country, and the other half in the North Eastern part, both separated by the Nation of India.

When the British came to North America, they found it to be occupied by the Native people, whom they considered "savages". The Brits used the Natives as long as it served their purpose, but never treated them fairly as equals. The Natives were eventually forced onto Reservations, which were usually the most undesired lands available.

Native men could marry non-native women and remain on the Reservation with their rights intact. A Native woman could marry a non-native man, but she would lose all of her rights, including her right to live on the reservation. Native children were forcefully removed from their families and placed in Residential Schools. The purpose was to forcefully assimilate the Native children into European culture. Effectively causing the Native Language and Culture to become almost extinct.

Fortunately, there always remained a few elders who were able to pass on the culture and language to the children so that their culture and language exists yet today. Most of the Native children were treated horribly in the residential schools, which were mostly operated by the Religious Sect. Priests and Nuns severely punished the children, when even on their first day at the school, they spoke to a relative or friend in their Native language. Many of the children were sexually, physically, and emotionally abused by the priests and some by the Nuns. In some cases the Nuns were worse abusers than the priests. These children, and their families were considered non-people and therefore had no right to a good quality of life.

Then during war-time, many of these so-called non-people chose to fight for their country, side by side with their European oppressors, and in so doing were oppressed even further. As a result of the Native men joining the service, their families were thrown off of the Reservations, and had no rights whatsoever. Further, upon their return from war, these Native Veterans were not even recognized by this Country as Veterans. No Native Veteran was permitted to march in any Remembrance Day Parade until 1985, forty years after World War Two.

I often wonder, what would North America be like today, if the Brits and the French had treated the Native People as equals, as human beings right from the days of their arrival here? How different or similar would life here be today, if the Natives were allowed to continue their Traditions, Cultures, Religion and Rituals without the requirement of assimilation into the European way of life? How would life here in North America be the same, or different had the Brits and the French left the Natives live their lives the way they had for ten thousand years or more before their arrival? Had the Europeans not been blinded by their feelings of superiority what would life here really be like? So I say again, we really need to Live and Let Live.

This is just my opinion.

Mixing a Modern Powwow

By Carly Lovett
Student Intern

(Ed. note: This article originally appeared in What's Up Yukon on July 26.)

Until recently, First Nations drum beats and chants have been relegated to the rural aboriginal landscape.

Powwow music, while remaining extremely important to First Nations people, could never have been considered in any way, edgy or modern.

A group of DJs from Ontario has been doing its best to change that for good.

A Tribe Called Red (ATCR) is a group of three, Ottawa-based DJs in the process of doing something unique.

Dan General (DJ Shub), Ian Compo (DeeJay NDN) and Bear Witness are mixing traditional powwow sounds with electronic club beats to create dance parties that foster a community among First Nations youth in urban spaces.

The parties are called

"electric powwows" and the group began hosting them in 2007. The current members have been working together since late 2009.

"It was just a simple idea to showcase ourselves as aboriginal DJs doing something positive in Ottawa," says group member Bear Witness.

"But what happened right away was that there was a huge turnout of aboriginal people that we didn't know in the city—we were sold out in the first night and really quickly became aware that it was something important, that we were creating a space within the club environment of Ottawa where aboriginal people feel comfortable."

Powwow sounds and electric beats blend surprisingly well in the music created by this group of forward-thinking DJs.

The history and passion conveyed in powwow drum beats and chants marries the sheer energy of electronic music to create a seductive and intoxicating drug that makes you want to dance all night long.

The powwow sounds in most of ATCR's music is mixed from existing CDs. Recently, however, the group has arranged to get a powwow group into the studio and they will be using those fresh sounds in upcoming tracks.

Earlier this year they produced a self-titled album, which was long-listed for the Polaris Music Prize.

DJ Shub and Witness are both members of the Cayuga First Nation of Six Nations, and DeeJay NDN is Ojibwe from the Nipissing First Nation.

The fact that all three members of ATCR were raised in cities, (Witness in Toronto, Shub in Fort Erie and NDN in Ottawa), has in no way lessened their ties to their roots.

Witness says all three of them still feel a strong connection to their First Nations community, and are passionate in fostering those ties in others.

The group members consider themselves to be part of the existing cycle of urban First Nations community building.

"A lot of us have been urban for a number of generations," says Witness.

"If you go back to our grandparents' generation, where people were first moving to the city, there was this real feeling of having to give up part of your culture and part of yourself, to leave your community and basically assimilate, become part of the urban community, assimilate to the settler nation.

"But in our parents' generation, that really started to change. People were trying to reclaim a lot of culture and find a way to have an urban aboriginal identity that wasn't losing, that wasn't becoming less than or assimilating, that you could be urban and aboriginal at the same time."

ATCR is an integral part of this movement, especially for First Nations youth.

However, Witness is modest about their contribution to the process of urban First Nations community building.

"I wouldn't say that we're creating [the community], I'd say that it's being created," he says.

"It's something that we're just part of, we're giving it a soundtrack."

None of the group's members has ever set foot in the Yukon, and they are excited to be coming here.

They will be performing at the Palace Grand theatre on August 18, and will lead a workshop on mixing with turntables early that afternoon in the Front Street Gazebo.

Proceeds from their performance will go towards the Moosehide Gathering, which was concluded last weekend.

This Will Be My Yukon Story: Pt. 3

By Howard Stearns

In part two of this story, Howard Stearns finally said farewell to Dawson and moved on to Whitehorse, where he and his friend, Ralph, settled in for a time.

We found an old dilapidated building that we rented for five dollars a month and then proceeded to buy a little food and look for jobs.

Ralph got a job very quickly but I looked for several days and finally found a man cutting wood in the vacant lot. The man's name was John McKaisic (McIsaac?), and he asked if I wanted a job. I could drive the honey wagon.

There were no services of any type in Whitehorse except downtown. All of the toilets were outhouses, which had a 5-gallon pail and had to be dumped on a weekly basis. The truck was a single axle World War II with a steel tank 6 feet square and 6 feet deep at the rear. There was a ladder welded to the side of it and the drill was to carry the bucket up the ladder and dump the contents into the tank. When the tank reached a sloppy level you drove the truck to the river and opened a big valve and emptied it.

I was now back making 50 cents an hour. The word was that if you put in two weeks on the honey wagon you would get promoted. There were no washing facilities in our shack, so after a week or so I couldn't stand the smell of myself. I managed to put in the two weeks and was promoted to driving a 6 x 6 truck out in the bush and cutting down 6 to 8 inch trees then cutting them in 16-inch lengths.

The next promotion was what they called the water wagon and it consisted of the usual army truck with a large tank, which I would go and fill from a stream and then travel the same route that I did for the wood and the honey wagon. You have a large 5-gallon pail that you filled and then carried it in to the container in the kitchen, which everyone had, and the price for 5 gallons of water was 25 cents.

There were no Laundromats in Whitehorse but they did have a place where you could take a shower. The drill was you went in with a large bar of soap, stood in the cold water and soaped your clothes, then removed them and then went on to wash yourself. Then you wring the cloths dry as possible, put them back on, and get on with your day.

John was expanding his business and was starting to haul lumber from various mills up and down the Alaska Highway so I was soon driving much bigger trucks with heavier loads. We finally found a better place to live but still had no facilities. The ground in the North Country is permafrost so it is a huge task to put any pipes in the ground.

I had loved airplanes since I was a little kid and now that I was making a little money I decided to go and take some flying lessons, so I made an appointment for a Saturday morning at nine o'clock. Friday, the day before, we both got paid and had a little bit of surplus money so we went to the liquor store and bought a 40 ounce bottle of Logana wine and a small bottle of Whitehorse scotch of which we decided to consume most of it and fell off into a drunken sleep in the early morning. I awoke about 11 o'clock feeling close to death and realized that I had missed my appointment. The airport was above the city and about a mile and a half walk and I arrived there about noon.

The airplane was owned by a man and his wife and I was most apologetic for not showing up at nine o'clock, but she didn't seem at all concerned and the other man who had an appointment went in my place. The sad news was they were never found, there was a large lake I think called Laberge and they assume that they crashed into the lake.

The other close call was a large diesel low bed that I was moving bulldozers on. I had made two trips with it and was transferred to a lumber truck and the other driver going down one of the long hills lost brakes and was killed. The religious folks explain this as "God's not through with you yet, and that's why you're here". How can you doubt that? The summer passed quickly and the chill of fall was in the air and I knew that I didn't want to winter in Whitehorse as it can reach 70 degrees below zero Fahrenheit. My friend Ralph had fallen in love and was going to stay for the winter so I started to make plans as to how I could get home. Even though I had made a fairly decent wage I didn't have much to show for nearly a year's work so to fly home was just too expensive. The alternative was to take the narrow gauge railway train from Whitehorse to Skagway Alaska and then a ship to Vancouver, which is what I did.

I relived the Skagway train experience last year and it was wonderful. The boat trip was what they called steerage and it consisted of some angle iron welded to the hull in the bow and a plank bed. Fortunately I had some blankets and actually had a very nice trip that took about six days. Having seen several of the Alaskan coastal cities in 1947 and then seeing them again 64 years later was very interesting.

I will now continue with my story of the Yukon, as I write this I am in Dawson City staying in an RV park, or as some say, coming home after 65 years. There are a few new buildings in Dawson but the majority are still the old 1900 style and they're just fabulous. The management of Dawson City has absolutely refused to let any of the fast food people open and there are many strong ordinances regarding new buildings. They have to conform in terms of design and paint to the originals.

The hospital that I worked in 1947 sadly burned down in 1957 but I drove up to the site on my quad and looked at the property. You are allowed to drive quads all over if they're licensed in the Yukon but I was informed that they look the other way if the quad is from out of town. I also hired a boat and driver to take me down to the Hulks of the old paddle wheelers. Sadly they are almost completely rotted and are barely recognizable. The tourist season is in full swing in Dawson and there are hundreds of RVs of all shapes and sizes. I attended a stage show last night depicting the old dance hall shows of the 1800s and it was really well done.

The only bad news in Dawson is that it sits in a valley with huge mountains on both sides and my Star Choice dish will not pick up any television. The stick for my Internet does not work, nor does my cell phone, but I am managing to survive without them. Today is 25 June 2012, and I will stay one more day and head back to northern British Columbia.

The Case for Gold

By George Filipovic

Between a person who has all their wealth in the form of gold and another who holds only cash, it is the one with the gold who is the cautious investor. It is the one with the cash who's betting the farm, the risky gambler.

To begin to wrap your head around this truth, you first need understand one thing. Having your Canadian dollars "just" sit in the bank is an investment.

If a Greek held some of his wealth in Canadian currency, you would say he's invested in Canadian dollars. Yet many of you hold all your wealth in Canadian dollars, betting everything you have on Canadian dollars, and still think you're not investing and/or "playing it safe." You may even accuse friends who convert some of their wealth into gold of being the "risk takers." Wrong on all counts.

Holding your wealth in the form of Canadian currency is not safe. In fact, if you held it in that form for the last five or ten-years (or worse, longer than that), you have probably lost much your wealth already and don't even know it. Why do I say that? Your dollar can't buy as much today as it used to. By definition, your wealth has decreased; your wealth has not been protected.

Beware the illusion. A dollar has always been worth a dollar. Don't be fooled into thinking that means its value remains the same. A Soviet ruble was always worth a ruble, even while its real value was plummeting. One day a Soviet would walk into a bakery with a wallet to buy a loaf of bread, the next day he would need a wheelbarrow-full of the same currency. The only way to tell if currency has been holding its value is to measure it against something else.

Gas today is dirt-cheap. I'll say it again: gas today is dirt cheap. Stop thinking about gas in dollar terms, you didn't have to hold your wealth in that form. For a long-time now, the stock and commodity markets have made it very easy to convert your wealth into all sorts of other forms.

The people who realised this have benefitted. To those who years-ago converted their wealth into gold, copper, soybeans – a whole range of commodities – gas has looked cheaper and cheaper. It takes less ounces of gold to buy a litre of gas. Takes less pounds of copper or soybeans. To these people, their wealth has been protected; more than that, it's been enhanced.

Holding your wealth in the form of cash simply because that's the form your wealth took when you were paid is the convenient, lazy option; and like most convenient, lazy options, it's proven to be far from the best one.

Now, I know what many of you are thinking. Hindsight is 20/20. What to do going forward? Isn't it too late? Surely buying gold at these prices is "risky," holding currency the "safe bet?"

Though an imperfect method, looking at historical behaviour is still the best way to predict future behaviour. And in that regard gold has beaten all the world's major currencies for 10 years-straight. Currencies have lost 10-years straight. As years go by, it takes less ounces of gold to buy a dollar (and many other products), and takes more dollars to buy an ounce of gold (and many other products).

Let me say it again. Gold has won and currency has lost: not eight or nine times out of the last 10, but 10 years in a row. If you bet on gold, you are betting on a 10-time winner. If you bet on currency, you are betting on a 10-time loser. If this were a boxing match and you were forced to have all your wealth behind one fighter or the other, where would you put it? I know who I'd bet on, and it's not the guy who lost to the other 10-times in a row. That, to me would seem a risky bet.

And through all this I haven't even touched upon the fundamentals. Almost all western countries, including Canada, have freely admitted they will run a deficit (lose money) for many years to come, and then still have massive debts to deal with after that. Imagine if a corporation released that kind of outlook. There would be no reason for share price to go up, especially short-term. Yet the currency situation is arguably worse: the biggest currency-fish in the sea, the United States, explicitly announced it intends to devalue its dollar by 33% over the next 20-years. Some predict the only way some countries will ever pay off their debt is by making their currency essentially worthless, so that a trillion dollars isn't actually worth all that much.

If you love gold, don't let anyone who holds cash tell you that you are the risky one, the gambler. Meanwhile, if you're the type who thinks gold is a risky investment compared to cash, you may want to re-think your position. Everyone works hard to acquire their wealth; it's worth taking a few moments of sober and careful thought to protect it.

Making Amends is Good for the Soul

By Colleen Simard,
Columnist, Troy Media

WINNIPEG, MB - I got an email from an old friend the other day. I hadn't seen the guy in a few years.

The message surprised me. He wanted to make amends. He said "I owe you an apology for anything that I might have said."

I wrote back saying an apology was unnecessary and wished him well with the new life he wrote about. I don't remember this young guy ever doing or saying anything to offend me.

I chalked his past attitude up to his youth.

My guess is he's now working a 12-step program like Alcoholics Anonymous. Step 9 is a good one: Make direct amends to such people wherever possible, except when to do so would injure them or others.

Good for him.

Whatever your background, age or circumstances, making amends is good for the soul.

Life is too short to carry around the dead weight of past mistakes, whether they were small ones, large ones or blunders only you remember.

Well, my friend's email got me thinking. Was there anyone that I needed to make amends to?

I sat and thought for a while and couldn't think of anyone.

Maybe reading too much Deepak Chopra or those long summer days of suffering at the sun dance taught me to forgive others and myself.

Or maybe I'm just getting old and forgetful.

I've done things I regret. But somewhere along the way I learned to let go and accept what I'd done wrong.

And over the years I've learned to get over my anger towards people who have treated me badly. I treated others badly, too. And I don't blame myself for things I had no control over.

It was just the way I got to where I am today.

Mistakes make people better people if they learn from them. I feel sorry for people who carry grudges and guilt around for decades. How hard their lives must be.

My people are, by and large, an accepting bunch. A couple hundred years ago we Ojibwa people accepted newcomers with open arms.

Many wrongs were done, and yet we accepted a fate many others now see as cultural genocide.

If Canada were a person, it'd have a few things to apologize for, and over the years it has tried to patch a few things up.

The Canadian government tried to make some amends just a few years ago in the form of a national apology and some money for children of residential schools.

Whether it was enough or whether the survivors accepted those words and moved on is up to them, but I pray they let that pain go.

But there are still amends of a different nature to make; they are the ones of an everyday nature.

I came upon two men the other day; one was down on the ground and the other guy was trying to help him up. The one on the ground was struggling like a turtle turned over onto its shell.

I watched the scene play out as people raced by in their cars in broad daylight.

Would passersby call an ambulance any sooner if the men were a different colour? Maybe it's wrong to think this way, but I can't help it.

If people could make amends with how they saw those men, they'd surely pull over. If those men could deal with their past maybe they wouldn't have been there in the first place.

If only we could burst that huge invisible bubble that keeps us from seeing each other as equals.

I would like to have seen someone help those drunk guys on the street.

Giving and accepting amends does set you free.

Letting go of the past and embracing life with courage and strength can get you through another day.

What is "Intercropping"?

By Lisa McKenna

Intercropping is the growing of 2 or more crops beside each other. One could have a row of beans, a row of corn, a row of beans, a row of corn etc...

The purpose of intercropping is to increase the yield of the plants, some by as much as 20%!

A deep-rooted plant can be planted beside a shallow rooter thereby taking nutrients from different levels of the soil. A tall plant can be grown next to shorter plants that require shade; a stronger companion can support plants that easily tip over in the wind and rain.

Some plants are used to prevent diseases, control the weed population and pests.

One can even intercrop a fast growing crop with a slow growing one to help ease harvesting. When intercropping it is important to study it thoroughly. For example, one's studies must include companion planting. This is where different crops are planted close together to assist each other in the acquisition of nutrients, pest control and pollination.

Intercropping has been used for over a thousand years. The Chinese would plant mosquito fern with in their rice patties. A prime example of companion planting is the mosquito fern fixes nitrogen from the atmosphere, which helps the rice to flourish, and it prevents light from reaching competing plants and weeds.

("Fixing" is when a plant is able to draw nitrogen, a gas, from the atmosphere and fix it into their rooting system therefore making the nitrogen available to other plants.)

First Nation people from the Americas, prior to the arrival of Europeans, practiced intercropping as well. The most common was the planting of maize (corn) and beanpoles. The beans would use the corn stalks as a trellis and they would 'fix' the nitrogen for the benefit of the corn. Later squash was added making what as known as the 'Three Sisters'.

Sunflowers were also grown as a trellis for beans or planted just to the North of the Three Sisters to draw away the aphids from the crops.

Most 'third world' countries practice intercropping and I feel that the 'first worlds' could learn a valuable lesson from these so called "backwards places".

4 is for Ever find a four-leafed clover? They are supposed to be a sign of good luck. The four leaves stand for faith, hope, love, and luck. A four-leaf clover is just a rare variation of the common three-leaf clover. The odds of finding a four-leaf clover are 10,000 to one!

There are four legs on a horse, a cat, a dog, a bear, a pig and even a squirrel! A frog has four legs, once it starts to grow them! Even a human or a bird has four "limbs".

JUST FOR FUN

Check out The Fantistic Four - Mechanized Maelstrom Game
The Fantastic Four consist of Mr.
Fantastic, the Thing, the Invisible
Woman and the Human Torch.
Your parents grew up with them.

Pyramids look like they are triangles but they actually have four sides. Pyramids were built to house the bodies of Pharaohs and kings and princes and... even Queens and princesses! Pyramids have been found throughout the world, from Egypt (the most famous for its pyramids) to Spain, Mexico, and even North America. The Great Pyramid was the tallest structure on earth for 3,800 years.

It took 2.3 million limestone blocks, weighing 5.5 MILLION tons! Then you have to add the 8,000 tons of granite and over 500,000 tons of mortar you have a pyramid that weighs over 6 million tons.

There are four directions on a compass, North, South, East, and West. There is a North Pole and a South Pole but does anyone know where the East and West Poles are?????

It was once thought that the human body contained four "humours". One of these humours is what is known as "black bile", and it is associated with Earth and autumn. People with a large supply are often despondent, sleepless, and irritable. Another humour is "yellow bile" and it is associated with Fire and summer, and these people are easily angered and basically bad tempered.

People with a lot of phlegm, associated with winter and Water, are calm and unemotional. Finally there are the ones with "blood". These folks have the blessing of Air and spring and are the most courageous, hopeful, and amorous of us all.

Can you guess which of the four elements is associated with each member of the Fantastic Four?
