NORTHERN WILDLIFE

Having being painfully darted and collared on three separate occasions in the past four years, Moose Bill tries a different approach

Halin conquers the greens

Story & photos
by Josée Bonhomme

The Forty Mile Gold Workshop and Studio announced in July that Halin de Repentigny had painted Dawson City scenes by Summer Solstice Light, with an exhibit to highlight the new works. Intrigued, I stopped in at Leslie Chapman's shop to admire the colourful canvases, with little Masonite board studies.

They were selling quickly, one day there was a painting hanging outside, the next day it was gone. The new look was a series of paintings in the summer phase of our climate, with scenes of places in Dawson that are unique and representative of our history and traditions. But capturing the light is where de Repentigny shines.

When I finally caught up to the prolific artist, he explained how it happened that he produced this new series of masterpieces. After a few summers (our winters) in Argentina, Bariloche to be exact, nestled in the Coastal range and blessed with lush greenery in all directions, Halin had no choice but to overcome his fear of greens.

Halin says, "I couldn't paint greens, they frightened me, they are so subtle and complicated. But they are not greens, they are greys... That's why I painted so many winter scenes, it took me 10 years to figure out the greens."

He strolled through town at 9 a.m. when our days are longest, when the morning light is filtered through the atmosphere and resplendent with its golden tinge. He captured the light as if it were a substance, a fluid, something you can touch. His representative style is considered a good example of modern impressionism, where shades and darkness can be purple, and light can be pink or yellow.

Most strikingly, de Repentigny is self-taught. "I started drawing when I was 10. We were not very well off at that time, so I went to Old Montreal to paint portraits alongside other street artists. The competition was fierce, so you had to make a best effort. I was the youngest one amongst seasoned artists, and I learned quickly," he adds.

On soul searching and growing up, Halin explains: "In projecting my life forward, I couldn't see myself as an old trapper standing outside my little cabin in the woods using a gun as a cane. I had to make a decision if I would continue as an artist, achieve and surpass my personal best, or disappear to live the life of the trapper. I did that, it fulfilled a time in my life where living in the wild was an inspiration. Now my daughters are 10 and 28. As an artist, I can provide better for others than by living off the sale of furs in a changing world."

His new-found skill has motivated de Repentigny to work arduously on a front-yard studio, getting ready for the Dempster Highway colour extravaganza. Halin has already made several trips to see if the colours are showing themselves. He is committing to Dawson again year-round, finishing his cabin on 2nd Avenue before winter, and we anticipate more works to appear at Forty Mile Gold.

Leslie Chapman feels it is important to help other artists

"Barber House", Halin de Repentigny

"Alley Scene", Halin de Repentigny

showcase their work, her mark-up is not what it is at other galleries where the artist receives little in comparison. It also adds to the attractiveness of the area with our talented residents, always producing quality arts and crafts. Oil painting, or any art, is demanding in the effort imposed by serious and attentive work. Halin exclaims, "even if I can finish a painting in a seemingly short time, the demands of intense concentration leave me quite exhausted once I'm done." (That is not surprising)

So for all you budding artists, or seasoned veterans, rest easy that even the most talented people have their own challenges to overcome. Dawson, in its support of the arts community, helps in providing visitors and residents with many enjoyable experiences celebrating the arts.

Halin de Repentigny's noteworthy murals in so many of our favourite establishments, even our struggling fabulous Laundromat, certainly help to give Dawson a touch of true Yukon lore and colour.

Uffish Thoughts: Gaining a toehold on the public's imagination

Story & photo
by Dan Davidson

Normally it is possible to leave the Yukon and hear almost nothing about the place once you cross the southern border. I admit that my semi-professional status has me checking on the two papers and the regional CBC feed each day online, but if I wasn't deliberately looking the place would be invisible.

Not this trip.

We were pretty much cut off for two days during the journey on the Matanuska down the Inland Passage from Juneau to Prince Rupert, and there was nothing really startling until August 28, when we were RV-ing in Terrace for a couple of days while visiting some old friends from our Alaska Highway days.

We saw the first postings on August 27, telling of the deliberate swallowing of the pickled toe in the Sourtoe Cocktail the previous Saturday. By today, as I write these words, there are 2,090,000 hits on Google when you search for this story. That's way more than the half a million you get if you just search for the drink itself.

Here's a sampling from the first four pages of hits:

- "Human toes wanted by Yukon bar for Sourtoe cocktail" (Fox News)
- "Human Toes Wanted to Complete Famous Cocktail" (ABC News)
- "Customer swallows human toe in Dawson City bar" (CBC

News)

- "Yukon bar patron swallows famous sourtoe, pays fine, leaves town" (thestar.com)

- "Mysterious American swallows Yukon bar's last human toe, pays $500 fine" (National Post)

- "The man who deliberately swallowed a human toe in bizarre cocktail ritual is a famous Hurricane Katrina survivor" - (Mail Online (UK))

- "Bar patron swallows human toe" (CNN.com)

- "Man fined £300 after swallowing HUMAN TOE in whisky cocktail" (Mirror News (UK))

- "Drinker at Yukon watering hole purposely swallows human toe" (Globe & Mail)

- "Man Swallows Toe At Dawson City Bar, Mystery 'Sourtoe Cocktail' Patron Wants 'Bragging Rights'" (International Business Times.com (New York and UK))

- "Customer fined $500 for Swallowing Human Toe in Canadian Bar" (Gawker.com)

- "'Josh From New Orleans' Swallows Severed Human Toe At Bar, Pays Fine, Skips Town" (Huffington Post)

- "A Hard-to-Swallow Tale: The Day a Dead Toe Touched My Face" (Travel+Escape.ca)

- "Man swallows toe, pays $500 fine at Downtown Hotel in Yukon" (YouTube)

Almost all of the "print" items have just about the same shot of the desiccated digit sitting on a mound of salt. Quite a few have links to that YouTube video that seems to have gone viral. Several have been posted by travel writers who have, at one time or another, joined the club.

You'll also note that the story has gone international. CNN, Huffington Post and Gawker (the folks who started the Toronto Mayor Rob Ford/cocaine fuss) are widely viewed all over the world, though they are based in the USA.

All the major Canadian news services ran with the story, as did our Yukon press. You might say the story has gained a real foot - er, toe - hold on the public's imagination.

Letters to the local papers have tried to draw some connection between this "disgusting" act and the "equally disgusting" act of simply eating meat of any kind, showing how quick some people are to work in their own propaganda where they see an opening.

You really can't buy kind of advertising. The new owners of the Downtown Hotel have been quick to capitalize on it with their Sourtoe Quest Contest, which the Klondike Visitors Association seems to be helping to promote via Facebook.

"People are invited to post a photo of their toes on Travel Yukon's Facebook wall. The photos will then be posted to the "Sourtoe Wall of Feet" and five contestants will be chosen from the submissions by a panel of true Yukon sourdoughs, including the original Captain Dick of Sourtoe Cocktail fame.

"The five contestants will then be asked to explain why they should be chosen to take their toe (still attached of course) to Dawson City to experience the town and the legendary Sourtoe Cocktail in person, as well as how they will share their journey through social media."

Captain Dick Stevenson (see here in 2009) has been trying for some years to gain a toehold on a kind of immortality. He intends that his ashes should be placed in the oversized toe seen above the bar at the Downtown Hotel.

There's a prize of $5,000 attached to this contest. That's still really cheap by national advertising standards. As of this writing, there are 92 photos on the Sourtoe Wall of Feet, but I'm sure there will be hundreds by the time this sees print.

Two Domes and a remarkable coincidence

For some years I've been fascinated by the life and work of Robert W. Service and I'm thrilled to be planning a visit with my wife to Dawson City next May, travelling from the UK in the footsteps of RWS, via Vancouver Island, Skagway and Whitehorse.

A few weeks ago we were dining in The Dome restaurant in Edinburgh's George Street when I received an email from the editor of this newspaper; I'd asked him what the weather was doing in Dawson and Dan thoughtfully sent me a link to the webcam showing the old CIBC building in Front Street. I was in The Dome, Edinburgh, and this e-mail had been sent from somewhere near the Midnight Dome, Dawson, but the coincidence goes deeper.

Robert W. Service left school in Glasgow in 1888, at age 14, and his first job in "a shady shipping office" came to an abrupt end when the proprietor absconded with the firm's money. Robert's father had been a banker in Glasgow and was delighted when his son asked if he could arrange an introduction. Robert Sr. fixed a meeting with the accountant at his former employer, the Stobcross [Glasgow] branch of Commercial Bank of Scotland. The following week the accountant escorted young Robert to Edinburgh for an interview at the Head Office of the Commercial Bank, where Robert was offered the position of junior Clerk at Stobcross.

In 1968 the Commercial Bank merged with the Royal Bank of Scotland whose head office is still just 200 yards away in Edinburgh's St Andrew Square. Subsequently the magnificent neo-classical Commercial Bank building was turned into The Dome restaurant, where I was sitting when I received Dan's e-mail.

I'm sure I don't have to remind readers that in 1908 Robert was transferred from the CIBC in Whitehorse to the bank's Dawson City branch. A year later, when his second book of verse, Ballads of a Cheecako, had become as successful as Songs of a Sourdough, Robert was called into the manager's office and told he was being promoted to deputy manager back at Whitehorse. Robert surprised the Manager by resigning; he had decided to pursue a career in writing. He moved into the cabin on 8th Avenue and spent the next two years writing The Trail of '98.

So, while I was sitting in the building in Edinburgh where Robert had been offered his first job in banking, I received an e-mail with a link to a webcam showing the building in Dawson where he had resigned from his final job in banking.

The Klondike Sun is sent to me in the UK and I'm fascinated to read about your community. I'm pleased to learn that the CIBC building – curiously overlooked by Scottish comedian Billy Connolly during his TV journey across the far north – is receiving attention. I've read Laura Berton's book and several of Pierre's, so I know of the Berton House. And of course I have mixed feelings about my mandatory visit next year to the Downtown Hotel, but I'll force myself to have a Sourtoe!

I would love to be kept up to date with whatever's scheduled in Dawson during my visit in late May 2014 and will be delighted to receive recommendations from anyone with ideas on what I should do and how best to enjoy my stay, and especially from anyone who shares my interest in RWS. My e-mail address is ian@42castleoak.co.uk.

May I end with a brief obit: Some readers may have met Wallace Lockhart when he visited Dawson some years ago; his book On the Trail of Robert Service remains one of the most accessible of the Service biographies. Tragically Wallace died last year after a short illness. He is still fondly remembered by many, not least for his enthusiasm for his subject.

Black feathered spirits dance above our heads. They call each other "You" or "I" and cackle at our ephemeral awareness of what is, and our prepossession of what has been, or what is yet to come.

They move around, looking at dirty hand, broken mountain face, kicking leg, camera, lit cigarette, beer can, sourdough, boardwalk, stolen bicycle, flooded tent, tilted structure, burning waste, puddle jumper, falling rain, falling building, falling man.

Whilst the sightseer interrogates us about reason, origin, direction, and we invent stories we can't recall anymore because the days have been many and long.

The night has fallen upon us; the solar storm bathes us just as it did before in hiding. Those incandescent flares of dust and gas, witnesses of our rise, our fall, and our resurgence, were there, long drawn from our grasp because of doze and inebriation.

Thank you nurses, doctors and co -

2013 Great Klondike International Outhouse Race

Story & photos
submitted by the KVA

On September 1 the Original Game of Thrones, the Great Klondike International Outhouse Race took off in front of Diamond Tooth Gerties.

The teams involved in the Outhouse Race were:

The Stool Kids Riding the Stool Bus

The Princess Party Poopers (The Gerties Dancers)

The Dirty Gerties Girls (The Visitor Information Centre)

Farts Canada Presents the Klondike Steamer (Parks Canada)

House Ex-Lax

The Yummy Mummies

The judges were: Erin Pasloski (new to Dawson), Jamie Mann (long time Dawsonite), Natasha Rumsey (visiting from Whitehorse)

Our Hosts/Emcees: The Kings of Dawson (Brendan Reese and Ben Rudis)

Highlights of the race:

The Dirty Gerties Girls decided to be in the race very last minute (the morning of the race). Having to comply by the rules meant that they needed 5 team members. Having only three willing to participate... they invited a tourist (visiting the Visitor Information Centre) to be a part of the team. He happily accepted and joined in the fun. The fifth participant was a pair of shoes and a wig.

Farts Canada Presents the Klondike Steamer (made up of Parks Employees) had to give tours fifteen minutes after the contest ended.

And, the Yummy Mummies invited a German tourist who was watching to get in their outhouse during the race – despite being the slowest to arrive they received the overall prize for sportsmanship and spirit!

Press release

Whitehorse – The Tourism Industry Association of the Yukon and Klondike Visitors Association are pleased to announce that Sheena Greenlaw and Erin Oliver-Beebe have been chosen as the 2013 Giovanni Castellarin Scholarship winners. As this year's successful applicants, Sheena and Erin will each be awarded a $1,000 scholarship to assist with the cost of their post-secondary education in tourism.

Sheena Greenlaw has spent her whole life in Yukon and feels passionate about it as a destination. This year she will be enrolled in the Bachelors of Management program with a Major in Marketing at the University of Lethbridge. Since completing her marketing diploma in 2012, Sheena has been working for the Department of Tourism and Culture gaining practical knowledge of the industry. "In order to capture an audience that has been conditioned since birth to filter out the noise of advertisements, one must make sure they set themselves apart from the crowd, and make sure they are remarkable," Sheena says of her vision for destination marketing. Experience and education have taught her that the key to marketing Yukon is to be ahead of the curve, to attract unique people seeking a unique destination, using new more interactive forms of technology. Honourable mention also goes to Sheena for submitting a tourism-marketing rap with her application.

Erin Oliver-Beebe grew up in Yukon and had the experience of being raised in one of the biggest backyard playgrounds.

Her long-term vision for Yukon tourism is to see more people come and experience the back-country, getting people off the road and into the wild. "I want to show everyone the true Yukon; the breathtaking mountain ranges and glaciers, the exhilarating rivers, the pristine lakes and high alpine meadows," she says of her inspiration for going into Yukon's tourism industry. Erin has spent the last couple summers river guiding, and loved every minute of it. This year, she will be attending the Adventure Guide Diploma program at Thompson Rivers University with the hopes of returning to Yukon and beginning her own adventure tourism business.

The Tourism Industry Association of the Yukon and the Klondike Visitors Association awards the Giovanni Castellarin Scholarship annually to two Yukon students entering a post-secondary tourism or related program. The scholarship was established in 2002 in memory of Giovanni Castellarin, a long-time champion of tourism in Yukon and the Klondike. This year the scholarship intake was moved from December to August to better coincide with the school year.

New regulations will modernize Yukon business legislation

Press release

WHITEHORSE (September 5, 2013) —The Yukon government is seeking feedback on new and amended regulations that are the final step in modernizing Yukon's 30-year-old business legislation.

The Business Legislation Reform Project began in 2008 with the proclamation of a new Securities Act.

"This project has been a major undertaking," Minister of Community Services Brad Cathers said. "When complete, Yukon will have some of the most robust and modern business legislation in the country, creating an environment that is welcoming to business while providing safeguards to Yukon consumers and investors."

Also under the Business Legislation Reform Project, other legislation has been created and updated, including:

- the new Securities Transfer Act, and amendments to the Business Corporations Act, Partnership and Business Names Act, Societies Act and Cooperative Associations Act which were all assented to in the fall 2010 legislative session;
- the further modernization of the Securities Act in fall 2012, along with the introduction of amendments that are part of an ongoing provincial and territorial harmonization initiative; and
- the fine-tuning of statutes within the Business Law Amendment Bill introduced in spring 2012.

These acts will be proclaimed and come into force once the accompanying new and amended regulations are approved. Global rules on naming corporations, partnerships, societies and cooperatives will be contained in the new naming regulation.

Interested Yukoners can provide their feedback on the regulations by visiting http://www.community.gov.yk.ca/corp/businessleg_review.html. Comments will be accepted until November 2, 2013.

The RCMP and territory's fire marshal's office are investigating what appears to be a fatal fire Sunday at a mobile home in West Dawson.

Fire marshal Dennis Berry confirmed early this afternoon the fire burned the building to the ground.

Both the RCMP and Dawson's fire department were on the scene of the fire.

A body, whose gender has not been released, was found inside the burned-out structure.

The RCMP and the fire marshal's office still have investigators at the scene today.

Berry told the Star he expected more details to be forthcoming.

Leaving their mark in the Signpost Forest

by Dan Davidson

(Watson Lake) - The Signpost Forest in Watson Lake grows like a living thing. It was started in 1942 by a lonesome American GI, who decided to point the way to his home in Danville, Illinois. Private Carl Lindley added his personal sign to the official military sign that was already there and started a tradition. The originals are long gone, but when Lindley came back to Watson Lake for the 50th anniversary of the building of the Alaska Highway in 1992, he replaced his sign in the forest, which had grown considerably since then.

It passed 10,000 signs in 1990, when Olen and Anita Walker of Bryan, Ohio, posted their board. This summer the Visitors Information Centre says there are 72,000, a number that is easy to believe as one wanders through the labyrinth that the forest has become.

There are all kinds of signs: official municipal signs liberated from their homes, wooden house signs, street signs, speed limit signs, licence plates, signs made of metal, wood, plastic and less durable stuff. One posting is on a rapidly deteriorating Styrofoam pie plate that will make space for something new in a few years as it crumbles under the stresses of summer heat and winter cold. The tin plates last better. One sad sign was nicely painted on a slab of birch, but the bark is peeling away and a few good storms will likely finish it off.

One couple, who did not give their names, offered that they had come back from Michigan to see the sign they had posted 15 years earlier. They'd found it, but were having a little more trouble locating the one their son had left.

The town encourages people to leave their mark.

"Be a part of this tradition and add a sign of your own!" says the website notice. "You can bring one or buy a board here and make it yourself at the visitors' centre."

Michelle Metych and Chris Wiley came from Illinois prepared to join in the tradition. Michelle learned about the place as part of her work with the Encyclopedia Britannica, where she is a product coordinator and senior copy editor. Chris, her husband of five years, works as head of IT for an Oak Park security company called viaForensics. Oak Park is a suburb of Chicago.

They'd had a metal casting made with her parents' names on it and the date of their marriage in 1980. The senior Metychs have never been to Watson Lake, but Michelle says they'll have to come here now. She didn't tell them she and Chris were going to do this, but the digital photo they send them will tell the tale.

For themselves, Chris and Michelle left her expired licence plate, which ran out at the first of September: Illinois MISHY 21. Private Lindley would be proud.

The forest has become increasingly dense over the years.

These folks came prepared to leave their signs behind.

Chris Wiley and Michelle Metych came to leave signs for themselves and for her parents.

Just inside the entrance, these folks are looking for their son's sign.

Editorial: Harper's Arctic Failure

His lack of commitment to his stated goals will leave a stain on his time in office

EDMONTON, AB
Troy Media
by Robert W. Murray

Sovereignty, security, patriotism and pride are all very attractive and powerful concepts have played prominently in Prime Minister Stephen Harper's rhetoric surrounding the Arctic since being elected in 2006.

His promises to bolster Canada's claims to the Northwest Passage, the creation of permanent Canadian Forces Ranger units to protect the nation's North and the building of naval vessels capable of patrolling Arctic waters have consistently been highlighted as aspects of Harper's vision for a Canada First national defence strategy.

During his recent Northern sojourn Canadians were again inundated with media images of the Prime Minister taking target practice and making announcements of federal government initiatives focusing on economic development as a key means of ensuring his continued commitment to the Arctic.

But all that attention leaves me wondering why Harper continues to act as if the Arctic remains at the top of his defence policy priority list. He has been making promises for years to bolster a Canadian presence in the Arctic - especially in the form of the Canadian Forces - but, to date, there has been no significant progress in actually delivering on his commitments.

In a recent article in the Globe and Mail, Arctic security expert Dr. Rob Huebert asserts that Canada "has to walk its Arctic talk" and take seriously the fact that other states, including Russia and the United States, have challenged Canadian claims to its Arctic sovereignty. Huebert quite correctly pointed out that just because other states are not overtly testing Canada's claims militarily at this point does not mean it is out of the question in the future. Further, it is a well-known fact that Arctic states and Arctic-interested states have all invested substantial financial, political and military resources into protecting and asserting claims of territorial sovereignty and potential resource extraction.

Canada's negligence in these areas, however, has led to an indisputable reality: Canada has fallen so far behind in being able to achieve the goals Harper articulated that his Arctic failures are becoming a stain on his time in office.

During his time as a Prime Minister in minority parliaments, Harper was quick to defend the need for Canada's foreign and defence policies to focus on national security and sovereignty. The justification of a 'Canada First' doctrine allowed Harper and his Cabinet to rationalize a retreat from multilateralism, cuts to foreign aid spending, and a move away from the Liberal-era focus on human rights and security. But since achieving a majority government in 2011, Harper has committed Canada to a mission in Libya that had no clear impact on Canada's national interests, has been vocally supportive of human rights protection internationally, and has placed higher value on international institutions, as exemplified with Canada's assuming the Chair of the Arctic Council earlier this year.

Canadians were promised a new era of national security and economic development in the North, which, to date, has not occurred. While Huebert's determination to force the government to live up to its promises is noble, the fact remains that Harper will never be able to live up to his seven years of strong Arctic rhetoric. As has been the case throughout Canadian history, in order for Canada to achieve the levels of sovereignty and security it requires and desires, it will have to depend on allies, diplomacy, and multilateral institutions.

The notion that Canada was ever going to be capable of defending its own Arctic interests is a fallacy, and though Harper has been quite effective in painting a picture of a Canada that is strong and free in the North, his track record on Arctic sovereignty tells us all we need to know.

Canada is barely hobbling its Arctic talk, and the hope of it ever actually walking it seems to be nothing more than increasingly unpersuasive political rhetoric.

Luck is for the Making

by Steve Northwood (a pen name),
Delta, B.C.

"Try your luck, Mister?" asked the woman from behind the black jack table. She was shuffling her cards, then squaring the deck with a couple of taps. "No, no thanks," I said. "I'm not very lucky. I'm just here for a drink and maybe stay to catch a show."

The dealer wore a snug black satin vest over a puffy sleeved white blouse. She had a roundish face, cropped grey hair and eyes that I sensed had witnessed a lot. I guessed her to be in her mid-fifties and still quite fit. I could also detect a faint accent.

"That is no problem," she said. "Sit here and they will bring you a drink."

"Thanks, ah..." I said, squinting at her name badge, "Erika."

The bar and casino was clean and new, but had been established in an old hotel that dated back to the glory days. The décor was period but the cash registers and surveillance system were state of the art. In spite of patrons like me, the place was doing a reasonable business and Erika's was one of the few tables of any kind that not engaged. Barmaids balancing trays were weaving through the crowd, each in uniform and with a fan of folded tip money lodged between two fingers. Erika signaled to one of them and within two minutes I had my order.

"Are you in town on business or holiday?" she asked as my beer arrived.

"I'm here working," I said. "We are doing a survey on one of the placer gold claims outside of town. It's a rugged piece of country back there. I must say I am not too hopeful that this one will amount to much."

"You never know," she answered, brushing down her table. As she completed her pattern with the brush, she said: "I think I will take my break now," and sat down on her stool. "Maybe you can tell me what you are doing back there in the woods."

I took a sip of my beer. "We have a contract with the company that owns the claim," I explained. "We are measuring the depth of overburden for them so they can determine if it is worth trying to dig down to the paydirt. We also contract out excavators and wash plants if things go that far." I took another sip. "We do the work and fight the mosquitoes, in the end they get the gold. That is, if they're lucky."

"I suppose that is how things work," Erika said. "But if you do not play, you cannot win."

"I suppose so," I said, finishing my beer. "You know, I think I will turn in. I am back out to the property early tomorrow morning."

"OK," she said, standing up. "It was nice to meet you. See you tomorrow evening?"

"Probably," I replied. "This should cover the beer," I added, leaving a five dollar bill on the table

The next night I returned to find Erika again at her black jack table.

"Ah. There you are," she called out. "Maybe try your luck tonight?"

"No thanks, but I'll have another one of your beers," I said, sitting down at her table. The beer order was signaled and the waitress collected my pint from the bar. "It was a hot one today and I'll tell you, I have my doubts about this claim that I am working on. I doubt the owners will make a dime from it. I would rather be getting my pay cheque, such as it is." I looked around the room as my drink was delivered. "It seems a bit quieter than last night," I observed.

"Yes," she said. "One of the big tour groups left today so we will be slower until the next one arrives."

"I guess this place relies heavily on tours to keep going?" I asked. "And not a sure thing either, I would imagine."

"No," she said. "But so far we have been lucky. Tours have been a dependable business. We also get walk-ins and locals."

"Hope it keeps up for you," I said, taking a sip from my glass. "You don't sound like you are from around here. German?"

"Yes, I am originally from East Germany but left there thirty five years ago," she replied. "I have lived here for twenty years now."

"Hmm. Thirty five years ago," I said, doing the math in my head. "That would have been an interesting time to be in East Germany."

"Yes, interesting," she said, brushing down the table. "I left during the Soviet era."

I put down my glass and looked at her with renewed interest. "Indeed! I understand that movements were very restricted back then, with the Berlin Wall and all. How did you manage to leave the country?"

"I was a swimmer on the National team," she said, not looking up. "We travelled all around Europe to compete."

"The stories we heard in those days," I said, "were that the Eastern teams were always under close watch. No one could move freely when outside the Eastern Bloc countries."

"That is true," said Erika, watching a nearby customer who was having an animated discussion with one of the other card dealers. Whatever that issue was, it seemed to resolve itself quickly so she went on: "We were in Bonn, West Germany, at a swimming competition. Two of us managed to slip away from the chaperones. I made it to a safe place. I was lucky."

"That is quite an experience!" I exclaimed. "What happened to your friend?"

"I do not know," Erika said quietly. "I did not hear from her again."

We both sat quietly for a minute or two. Erika busied herself with counting out poker chips and arranging the stools around the table.

"I had relatives in West Germany and so I went to their home. My uncle was in government and he could pull some strings. There were a lot of negotiations between him and the East German officials and there were also some late night visitors, but in the end the paperwork was completed and I was allowed to stay."

"You have surely had an interesting life, at least as a young woman," I said. "You are certainly not afraid of risk."

"Sometimes you have to take risks to improve your life," she said. "Sometimes you have to make your own luck."

"I guess so," I said. "But it may not have ended so happily."

Just then another customer sat down at the other end of the table. Erika directed her attention towards him and they were soon engaged in a hand of black jack and sporadic conversation. I was content to watch, sip my beer and track some of the other activities within the room. The newcomer at my table was clearly on a budget and within twenty minutes had made his allotted contribution to the house. I caught Erika's eye as she re-organized that end of the table in anticipation of the next game.

"Well, he was not so lucky," Erika said, returning to my end. "But I like to think I gave him a few minutes of entertainment and a dream. A dream similar to what many people who have travelled to this place over the years have held."

"What brought you here?" I asked.

"When I was living in West Germany with my family, my cousin gave me books that told of this place, a northern land with mountains, wilderness, pioneers and endless opportunities. I could not get the vision out of my mind and dreamt that, with a little luck, I would go there some day."

"And so you did," I said. "That would have been a taking a big chance, leaving a comfortable life with your family and travelling alone to the other side of the world."

"To me it was something I had to do," Erika replied. "It became my dream and my passion. It was a chance worth taking."

We both fell silent for a few moments, then she went on

"I was lucky. I met some people along the way who gave me work. I practiced my English and learned some skills. When I arrived here, I had enough to get a room and some necessities. I found a job as a teller in the bank and learned about the stock market."

"Ah, the stock market," I said. "Well, staking your claim on the stock market is a good way to lose your money."

"The stock market is a gamble, yes," said Erika. "But if you are informed you can improve your luck."

By now it was getting late so I decided to return to my room for the night. I said good night to Erika.

"See you tomorrow?" she called after me.

"Yeah," I replied. "See you tomorrow."

On my way to the boarding house I thought about what I had heard that evening. Considering where she had come from and what she had been through, Erika was a lucky woman. To be here now and surviving, even if just dealing cards.

The next night I returned to casino and made my way over to the black jack tables. The place was much busier than the previous two nights with all tables occupied. A quick survey suggested there were upwards of one hundred people.

"Where is Erika tonight?" I asked the man behind what had been Erika's table. He was wearing a snug black vest over a white shirt and dealing cards to three patrons.

"Erika?" he said. "Oh, you mean Erika Strauss? She is, I believe, in the office." The man returned to his cards and his customers.

I glanced towards the front just as the office door opened and Erika emerged, followed by two young men in sports jackets.

"Ah, good evening," she called out when she noticed me. "Sit down. I will order a beer for you." Erika looked around, caught the eye of a bar maid and pointed to me. Then she and the two men went into a back room, emerging three minutes later with a laptop computer.

As she passed by me, I said "It looks to be a busy night! There must be a couple of tour buses in town."

"Yes," she called out over the din. "And very good for business. I will be right back."

She and her companions went back into the office and my beer arrived. The place was noisy with the sound of spinning slot machines, snapping decks of cards, clinking glasses and rolling dice. The human sounds were a mosaic of laughter, groans and cheers. Smiles were ubiquitous. I was half finished my beer when Erika walked over and perched on the stool next to me.

"You are not dealing cards tonight?" I asked.

"No, we are too busy and there was a problem with some of our time sheets," she said. "I had to sort that out because we have to meet payroll tomorrow."

"Payroll?" I asked. "Do you have to deal with payroll?"

"Yes. That is my job," she said. "I own this business and my people expect to be paid."

I stared at her as I put down my glass. "You are the owner of this bar and casino?"

"Yes, I am," she smiled.

"But why have you been working the black jack table?"

"Luck is for the Making" continued from previous page...

"When it is not busy I like to get close to my customers," she said. "To see what they like and what they dislike. To find out who they are. When I see them enjoying themselves, living their dream, they make me feel lucky."

As I left that night, I noticed the metal plate fixed to the wall beside the front door. Engraved lettering spelled out: 'Erika Strauss, Owner and Proprietor'. I finally understood her message. Luck sometimes finds you, but sometimes the more you dare to dream and the harder you work towards that dream, the luckier you get.

Luck's What You Make It

by Brian Collins,
Yellowknife, NWT

Come sit for a spell and a tale I will tell,
Of fortune both fair and foul.
So often it's said bad luck we do dread,
When it strikes, oh how we do howl!

And yet it does seem that it's not so extreme;
A glass half empty? What bull!
When luck comes to pass, take a look at that glass,
And you just might find it's half full.

Now, I've oft heard tell of the Yukon's spell,
And its tales of gold in great store.
But, ne'er had I the chance to spy,
Its beauty, charm and allure.

But life can be strange, as I broadened my range,
And ventured northward for work.
To the Mackenzie's broad delta, and the truth I do tell ya,
My duties I'd not planned to shirk.

In the Place of Man my journey began,
Then westward the trail it did lie.
Across rivers three the road would take me,
O'er the Dempster the gravel did fly!

Now, here in this land, with vistas grand Dawdle, I did. T'is true!
But little I did know, where the Peel waters flow,
A storm was beginning to brew.

As I stood at the border with my image recorder,
I wondered aloud to the sky,
"There's more to be seen beyond this great scene,
And one day I'll return by and by".

"My work's still half done, so I must make the run, Back to my transient base".
But my trip would be short, for the Fates they did snort,
"We'll soon wipe that smile from his face"!

As the crossing drew near I drove without fear,
'til the gathering of travellers I saw.
The looks on their faces showed me no traces,
Of the wonders the tundra did draw.

It soon became known that the winds had so blown,
That the Captain commanded, "Heave to!
On these waves we will falter, so we'll not cross this water,

'til the winds do cease or subdue".
I leapt from my truck, and cursed my bad luck.
With no crossing "Oh, what shall I do?
There's work to be done, and baggage I've none.
I'm hooped for sure - good and true"!

With no lodging nearby, and a threatening sky,
I knew there's naught I could do,
But turn once again to the Dempster's great plain,
To seek shelter, a meal and a brew.

So, off I did travel o'er that ribbon of gravel,
To Eagle Plains the road it did go.
Through the kindness of strangers I avoided dusk's dangers,
As to a room the innkeeper'd said, "No".

With dawn I awakened, my luck still forsaken,
For the old road behind me did crumble.
"Closed a week, maybe more", the highway man roared,
"For last night the Rock River did rumble"!

With all rooms yet full, it's southbound I'd pull,
To Dawson's fine City I headed.
Back on the trail with a great muddy tail,
Through tundra and mountains I threaded.

Through that wondrous land, though t'was not as I planned,
I couldn't quite fathom my fortune.
I said I'd return, though not with luck spurned,
But perhaps I've been singing a wrong tune.

For how to debate my fortuitous fate,
That led to such beauty and wonder?
How can I bemoan, grumble, or foam,
That misfortune's turned life all asunder?

For here I do witness the creator's sweet kisses,
O'er broad plains and sweeping green slopes!
Of silver backed willows and cotton grass pillows,
The artist's blithely crafted, deft strokes.

Onward I'd wend to my journey's end,
Where the Yukon's cool waters do flow.
At the Klondike's great city I hummed a fine ditty,
As before me new wonders bestow!

Here dreamers once moiled in a town now unspoiled;
Man's modern creations well hidden.
Its history well saved of adventurers who braved,
The rigors to answer gold's biddin'.

Accepting my fate, I took time to relate,
To the marvels the fair city affords.
With the Captain's sourtoe and Old Sourdough
Joe,
I rubbed elbows, and trod the old boards.

Through streets brown and dirty to Diamond
Tooth Gertie's,
I wandered and took in the show.
I'll admit I was hooked by the dealer's good looks,
So I sat and turned over my dough.

My luck at the table had me craving my cradle,
So the slots then got my attention.
Luck softly spoke and refilled my poke,
Without need for bank intervention.

With London and Service; now, don't you get nervous!
By their ghosts I was not abused.
For an eighth avenue tour I took a detour,
And found myself highly amused.

The days slipped by 'til finally I sighed,
As the highway man fulfilled his role.
The Dempster's reflowing and the ferry was going,
So northbound to Inuvik's my goal.

As once more I travelled the band of crushed gravel,
Through tundra and peak ringed plain,
I reflected on luck and plans gone amok,
And smiled at my misplaced disdain.

For life's what you make it, so don't you forsake it,
When fate deals an impetuous turn.
Just go with the flow for the next thing you know,
An adventure might be what you'll earn.

So when it does seem that your luck's too extreme,
Take a moment and give it a mull.
When luck comes to pass, take a look at that glass,
And you just might find it's half full.

Vanasse seeks the true story of Kate Carmack

Story & photo
by Dan Davidson

Deb Vanasse was in Dawson during the last week of August to speak about her work in progress, Wealth Woman: Kate Carmack and the Last Great Race for Gold, a project she has been working on for about three years.

Born Shaaw Tláa, Kate was once known as the richest Indian woman in America. While there seems to be no reason to accept the claim she once made that it was she, not Skookum Jim Mason, who discovered the nugget that led to the Klondike Gold Rush, Vanasse feels that she has been unnecessarily neglected in the history of the era.

"My interest in Kate Carmack began with hiking the Chilkoot Trail," Vanasse told her audience of about 13 on August 20.

Kate had been a packer herself in the pre-Klondike days.

"When she's mentioned at all in writing about the Klondike, it's as a difficult woman, a drunkard who gave her husband nothing but trouble."

She lays some of the blame for this at the feet of George Carmack's biographer, James Albert Johnson, who tended to play up Kate's bad points while overlooking those of her husband, portraying him as a deserving soul, a solid family man who was loyal to his friends.

The more she looked into Carmack's life the less accurate a description she found that to be.

Of Kate, his biographer left the general impression summed up by one of his book's editors: "After reading about her, who could blame a man for shedding her!"

"As it turns out," says Vanasse, "nothing could be further than the truth. Though cheated out of her wealth, Kate defied convention and proved that defeat need not follow loss. The more I learned of her, the more passionate I became about her story, and the more I knew it had to be told."

As she continued her research Vanasse concluded that most Klondike narratives about that period tend to glorify individualism and colonialism. She feels that Wealth Woman "will be the first authentic rendering of the gold rush from the perspective of those who were there first, the Alaska Natives and the First Nations of Canada."

"In her lifetime Kate Carmack was very well known. She was considered the richest Indian woman in the world."

People wanted to know a lot about her, and yet little was known. Kate couldn't write, so she left no record behind her. Many of the photographs that are said to be of her have turned out not to be. One of the best printed sources turned out to be from the court action that followed Carmack's death when his second wife tried to keep Kate from getting any of her former husband's money.

Vanasse gave an interesting talk that ranged from legend to languages, cultures and history. Those in the audience expressed a keen interest in reading her book when it comes out in about a year's time. A preview of a draft of the first chapter is available for reading on Vanasse's web blog, <http://selfmadewriter.blogspot.ca/2013/02/readers-wanted-win-free-autographed.html>.

Deb Vanasse is the author of several books for children and adults, including picture books, novels and a travel guide. She has taught at University of Alaska campuses at Kuskowim and Fairbanks and spent 11 years teaching at North Pole High School. She is the co-founder of the 49 Alaska Writing Center in Anchorage.
