For the last month Firefighters from the Dawson City Fire Department and the Klondike Valley Fire Department have been visiting homes across the Klondike (and across the Yukon before the ferry was pulled) as part of the Home Safe campaign to make sure households have a working combination smoke/carbon monoxide alarm. When they find no one home, they have been leaving information and a telephone number to arrange for a return visit.

The City of Dawson, together with the Dawson City Firefighters Association; Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in First Nation; Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada; Yukon Fire Marshal's Office; Klondike Valley Firefighters Association; Association of Yukon Fire Chiefs; Kluane Freight Lines Ltd; and Klondike MLA Sandy Silver have teamed up with Kidde Canada in launching a combination Smoke/carbon monoxide (CO) campaign. This campaign, intended to ensure every home in the Klondike has a working smoke/CO alarm, is part of a broad initiative to reduce fire-related deaths and injuries.

While research predicts working fire alarms could reduce fire deaths by as much as 32%, statistics show almost 70% of fire alarms in Canadian homes that caught fire from 2006-2011 were not functioning. Our most vulnerable populations – such as children and the elderly – face the highest risk of dying in a residential fire, said the campaign's press release.

Uffish Thoughts: The computer scammers are getting testy

By Dan Davidson

The "Windows Technical Support" folks have called me several times this week, as well as inflicting themselves on other members of my extended Facebook network. Most of us are pretty savvy about this kind of thing and we hasten to give advice to our less informed friends.

Sometimes I listen for a while, amused that this supposedly omniscient tech expert, who can apparently read the status of my computer, but is unaware that I'm not using a Windows machine, babbles on about how my equipment is sending him distress signals, and how he can help me fix the problem if I just follow his instructions.

I keep meaning to record one of these sessions so I can report on them verbatim, but my digital recorders are generally in one of my camera bags, ready to go to some meeting or event, so I miss the chance.

On one occasion early this week I was in the middle of writing one of these columns and didn't really have the time to play, so after I had heard the opening spiel, in which liquid East Asian tones assured me of his benevolent intentions, I snapped back that there was no way he could know what he claimed to know, and hung up.

Later, I thought I had missed the opportunity to learn more about this particular con game, so I made sure that one of my recorders stayed at my desk.

Today the phone rang again and a very similar voice, whose name I did not catch because of the accent, informed me that my computer had alerted him that it was infested with viruses. He wanted to show me the problem—then charge me to fix it.

Apparently my computer was running slower than usual and would, at some point, crash completely due to the accumulation of bad code in my Windows operating system.

"Are you aware of this problem?" my would-be helper asked me.

"No," I replied, and then I made the mistake of asking, "How is it that you are?"

Dead silence on the other end and then a very North American sounding accent told me to "f*&% off" and the line went dead.

Maybe it's just that this particular expletive sounds the same in any language, since most of the reading that I've done regarding this scam tells me that it generally originates in India or Bangladesh, just as most of the bank account scams seem to come from Nigeria or adjacent nations.

While some of the reports I've read state that the Windows scam has been around as long as the Nigerian 419 Banking scam, that can't be true. There are two reasons for this. The first one is that the 419 scams first arrived on airmail flimsies, and migrated to fax messages before their perpetrators discovered e-mail. And the second reason is that personal computers linking to the Internet and e-mail were not in existence until the early to mid-1990s. Up to that point when I filed stories in Whitehorse electronically, it was by my computer (a lowly Apple //c at the time) dialing up the Star's computer and "talking" to it directly. For the Sun, it was all "sneaker-net", which is what we called it when we put all the files on a 3.5" floppy disk (remember those?) and walked them down to the office.

While I missed my chance to hear the entire scam play out today, several articles I located with a simple "Windows Telephone Scams" search describe the process in detail and one, from Wired magazine's United Kingdom site, actually has a 26 minute audio and video recording (showing the event on his computer screen) of a scam in progress. It's well worth watching a bit of it.

Several of my contacts have reported getting the same abrupt end to the call that I did when they asked a question that the caller seemed to find too much to answer. Our shared experiences seem to indicate that the computer scammers are getting a bit testy. What I can be sure of, however, is that one of them will call again.

Strictly Small-time

There I was sitting in the Qantas plane heading back to North America feeling a bit down. Having said good-bye to good and loyal friends of over 60 years, and welcoming relatives, I wondered when next I would get a chance to see them again.

I leafed through the in-flight magazine and my eye caught photos of Dawson and a write-up under the title "Strictly smalltime". That goaded me a bit. Someone thought Dawson was "smalltime"! Especially as the article began with "Canada is huge..."

By now I had recovered enough to read on.

It was a good article. It began with the size of Canada, but went on to ask for local flavour recommendations and give you their favourite small town - quirky, independent and often historic little communities that effortlessly put visitors under their spell. And the coolest of the bunch? Dawson City, Yukon.

The writer did point out that "this clapboard charmer, despite its name, is not officially a city."

He gave the rise and fall of its Gold Rush history, but said that while Parks Canada has done much to preserve it, it definitely is not a museum, and its residents would not live anywhere else.

He quoted Meg Walker, who was a visiting artist in 2008 and stayed on: "Dawson is really welcoming. People are engaged and interested here, and people are willing to accept new ideas..."

He named some of our interesting gambling (the wood-floored Diamond Tooth Gertie's) and drinking establishments, including Bombay Peggy's, including the owner Wendy Cairns is here because Dawson bucks the stereotype of small towns - "It never stays the same here. There is an openness and tolerance in this community, but also a sense of adventure among the locals and transplants that come and go."

It really made a Dawsonite feel proud.

Fortunately, the senior couple next to me asked where I was from. Fortunately, I had the magazine opened to page 57 and could show them. And we talked Dawson for quite a bit. They will be coming up here in the near future.

The writer of the article was John Lee, and don't forget it was Qantas that chose to feature Dawson in its in-flight magazine.

Re: Dog Park

This is a letter in response to an article that was printed in the Klondike Sun regarding the Dog Park.

I am sorry that certain individuals feel that the park is small and lacking in equipment. For those of you who know me know that I have Border Collies, a very active breed. I try to take my dogs to the park at least a few times a week. They love it. They have plenty of room to run around and I have no problem throwing their ball with the "chuck it". I have to admit I do have to throw their ball length-wise, but the dogs do not seem to care. I have also had puppy play dates with other larger dogs and there was plenty of room for them to run around.

There have been various people along with the Humane Society who have worked very hard for the past couple of years to make this happen. I hope they are proud of this accomplishment. To some it may not be the dream park, but it is an amazing start. From my understanding, agility equipment has already been purchased. This of course cannot be safely installed at the moment. I have also heard that there might even be some courses offered in the next year.

This park is an area that will hopefully allow it to grow. I really wish that people would listen and actually hear all the facts before they knock something that has taken a lot of hard work.

Nadia Sollosy (Becca and Junior's mom)

P.S. Maybe I am not looking in the right area but I don't really know of any back or front yards in town that are larger than the Dog Park. But hey, that is just my opinion.

People should recall the sacrifices made for their freedoms

Story & photos
by Dan Davidson

Debbie Nagano said that her father, the late Steve Kormendy, didn't talk much about his experiences as a soldier during World War II.

"My father ... passed away this year," she told the audience at Dawson's Remembrance Day Service. "We believe that my father was the last World War II veteran living in Dawson that saw active duty."

Born in Czechoslovakia, Kormendy came from a family that had fought for Canada in the Great War after immigrating here when Steve was very young.

"When World War II broke out they didn't want him to go," Nagano said. "But Dad was determined and even lied about his age. He enlisted. He was 14 years old. He went on to serve with the Calgary Highlanders Scouts Platoon as a sniper, which made the best use of the sharpshooting skills he learned while shooting game for his family."

"I never knew of this as a child," she said. "I only learned Dad was in the army when I was 9 or 10 years old. It wasn't that he was ashamed of his past; it was because the stories he had to tell about the war were not suitable for kids. Those stories came out later in his life, especially when I started trapping with Dad and he figured I could handle them."

Rangers and Junior Rangers in Victory Gardens.

"We would be parked up on King Solomon's Dome, enjoying a peanut butter and bacon sandwich, admiring the view, and he would tell me about the things he had seen and the things he had done during the war. I'll spare you the details, by knowing that the stories were gruesome, bloody and heart breaking. There was no glory in the many ways young men died or how families struggled to survive during World War II."

"Dad never tried to impress us with his stories. He only told them so we'd know that war was not a good thing. Those experiences were about the only things my Dad brought home from the war. He struggled with them for many years. These days, soldiers can get help dealing with the things that they see in battle."

"My Dad never left the battlefield. He struggled with his memories. You could see it in the way he acted and in his demeanor. It's why he never liked being bossed around and chose instead to fish and trap, where he could be by himself and the only one giving orders."

"Remembrance Day was always important to Dad. He wanted people to know what it took for us to be free. People think it's a right to be free, but a lot of sacrifices were made so that we could have that right. Remembrance wasn't about the living for Dad; it was about the ones who weren't lucky enough to come home and enjoy what they fought for, the ones who gave their lives so people like us could be free."

"One thing's for certain: Dad would have been happy to have seen everyone here. He would often say 'I gave my life to the War. If I ask you to give an hour each year, you should on this special occasion of Remembrance.'"

Nagano's talk followed the marching in of the RCMP and Rangers, led by Ranger Chris Collin, the singing of "O Canada" by Michael Davidson and the Two Minutes Silence, made a bit more silent than intended when the CD player's batteries died before "The Last Post" and "Reveille" could be played.

Legion member Myrna Butterworth read "The Act of Remembrance" in English and Angie Joseph-Rear repeated it in Hän. Butterworth read "The Silent Soldier", a poem by Hector Renaud, and Michael Davidson recited "In Flanders' Fields."

Before Nagano's speech, Mayor Wayne Potoroka read the annual message from Prime Minister Harper.

Following the speeches, came the laying of the wreaths, with each officiant accompanied by a member of the Junior Rangers.

The ceremony ended with a blessing and benediction offered by the Reverend Laurie Munro.

Following the service in the Robert Service School gymnasium, the Rangers and Junior Rangers gathered at the cenotaph in Victory Gardens for a brief ceremony, before adjourning to the Legion Hall for a light luncheon and a chance to admire the new displays that have lately been erected there to honour Dawson's Legion veterans and the Rangers.

"Broken" asks, who are we when our memories fade?

Story & photo
by Dan Davidson

Brian Fidler begins by telling his audience in the Dānojā Zho Cultural Centre that some of what they are about to see and hear is real and some of it isn't.

What's real is the terrible erosion of a human being as his memories become like the faded photographs that are projected on the screen of the minimal set.

What's real is Fidler's personal experience of losing a grandparent to the void of Alzheimer's Disease. In his case it was his grandmother, he tells us during the Q&A session after the play has ended, and the details were much different than those presented in the play, but the emotional experience was the same.

If we are the sum of our memories, what is left of us when those are gone? That's the dilemma facing anyone who contracts Alzheimer's or some other type of senile dementia, and it's also the dilemma of those family members and friends who have to care for them.

In the play "Brian's" grandfather, whose great hobby has been photography, moves in with the family as he gets older, after his wife has passed on. He is set up with a suite in the basement and he and his grandson spend many happy hours together, as Brian learns something about cameras and hears the stories behind many of his grandfather's pictures.

The camera, mounted on a tripod, becomes something of a character in its own right. Fidler provides the voices of young Brian and his grandfather, but manipulates the camera, the slide projector and some of the other props as if they too were characters in the room.

Months move by and the old man begins to forget things, starts to repeat himself, becomes annoyed when Brian is able to provide the endings to stories he thinks he is telling for the first time. The slides, crisp and clear at the beginning, mirror his decline as portions of them begin to blur and distort.

There is a turning point one day when the old man gives Brian one of his old cameras as a birthday present, and almost immediately turns around and accuses him of stealing it. Paranoia strikes deep into the hear of their relationship, with grandfather forgetting more and more, suspicious that people are disturbing his stuff, unable to recall names and faces. As for Brian, he never knows just who he is going to meet at the bottom of the basement stairs. Will it be his gentle, loving grandfather, or this fire-breathing stranger who seems to be taking over his body?

One day they make a pact (a dialogue which requires bit of audience participation), that if the old man is ever institutionalized, Brian will come and free him, but when the time comes it can't be done, and in the end, even the old man's attempt to recall his grandson's name is reduced to an indecipherable scribble on his photograph.

All sorts of things are broken in this play: a life, relationships, and memories. "Broken" is this a very apt title for the work.

Fidler presents the story in an effective, understated performance that allows the horror of the situation to creep up on the audience. You know it's going to happen, but you keep hoping it won't. There was a lively discussion amongst the half dozen who remained for the Q&A after the show and those who had had some experience of brokenness were quick to acknowledge this as an accurate fictional portrait of the problem.

"Broken" was presented in Dawson City on November 8 through the partnership of Nakai Theatre and Ramshackle Theatre.

donated 120 of the 900 combination alarms that are being distributed, with a total retail value of $6,000, to support the goal of this campaign. The company made the rest available at cost, which is about half the retail price.

The goal of Home Safe is to have functioning smoke/carbon monoxide alarms in every household in the Klondike, said Dawson City's Fire Chief Jim Regimbal.

"Working smoke/carbon monoxide alarms are essential to keeping families safe and I am proud of all the firefighters who are taking the time to visit Klondikers in their homes. Together we are building a safer community."

"When Chief Regimbal contacted us with his plan to outfit every residence in his community with fire and carbon monoxide protection, we couldn't help but be impressed with his leadership and true concern for the safety of Dawson City residents," said Carol Heller, a home safety specialist with Kidde, Canada's number one smoke and carbon monoxide alarm manufacturer.

"By combining a partial Kidde alarm donation with local financial backing, Chief Regimbal's vision to improve the safety of every home under his watch came true and for that we applaud him."

John Gignac, a former firefighter and co-executive director of the Hawkins-Gignac Foundation for CO Education, also shared his congratulations for Dawson City's bold move. "After losing four members of my family to carbon monoxide poisoning in 2008, and watching the Yukon community suffer the loss of five citizens to the same silent killer just two years ago, I am proud of Chief Regimbal for making sure the smoke alarms he chose also feature a state-of-the-art CO sensor. And with a 10 year sealed battery that can't be tampered with, these alarms will be protecting families for the next decade."

Mr. Gignac was honoured to be in the Yukon Legislature this past May when Yukon became the first jurisdiction in Canada to make carbon monoxide alarms mandatory in all homes.

"As much as Dawson City is taking the lead in this life saving campaign, I can only see it spreading out to the rest of the Yukon in short order," said Regimbal. "I encourage anyone who would like to donate to this campaign to contact me so that we can ensure that everyone in the Yukon has a working combination smoke/carbon monoxide alarm."

At the official program launch in October Regimbal recalled how it had begun after discussions within Dawson's administration in August and how quickly Kidde Canada had responded to an email query.

Greetings and praise were heaped on the program by Yukon Party Community Services Minister Brad Cathers and Klondike MLA Sandy Silver, both of whom sent letters to be read at the launch.

Cathers noted that the Yukon has become the first jurisdiction in the country to require carbon monoxide detectors in homes and businesses.

Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Chief Ed-die Taylor offered thanks to the Fire Dept. and Regimbal for spearheading a potentially life-saving initiative.

"Looking out for one's neighbour is the pillar of any civil society," said Mayor Wayne Potoroka. "This campaign is going to keep us all safer and it shows that incredible things can be accomplished when we pull together."

Regimbal related a story that told how timely this initiative was. While making the rounds in West Dawson before the ferry was pulled, firefighters did find one home where excessive carbon monoxide levels were causing the residents to feel ill. When Regimbal and Henry Procyk went to check the place with a meter they found readings of 500 parts per million (ppm).

"For those who don't know," Regimbal explained, "anywhere from 400 to 800 ppm and in four to eight hours you're unconscious, followed by death. If it wasn't for the campaign we would have been pulling (this person) out of the building."

Kidde representative Pat Folliott explained the advantages of these combination alarms. There is no need to worry about changing the batteries, as they last for ten years. One of the biggest drawbacks to most alarms is that people don't change them regularly.

Another is that some types of alarms respond to cooking odours, causing people to remove the batteries and forget to put them back. These alarms do not react to regular cooking emanations and the batteries cannot be removed.

Folliott said the speed with which the Yukon has passed its legislation should be an inspiration to the rest of the country.

Responsible mining practices recognized by Yukon government

Press release

WHITEHORSE (November 19, 2013) —The winners of the Robert E. Leckie awards were announced yesterday evening at the 41st Annual Geoscience Forum banquet.

"The Leckie Awards honour Yukon mining and exploration companies who have demonstrated exceptional environmental stewardship and innovative mining practices," Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources Scott Kent said. "It is important for the Yukon government to recognize and show appreciation for this critical aspect of the industry."

Ben Warnsby and Alex Seely were at the banquet to accept the 2013 Leckie Award for outstanding and responsible practices in placer mining. With recently acquired claims in the Dawson mining district, the recipients addressed several unresolved environmental issues from earlier mining practices.

Mr. Warnsby and Mr. Seely acted immediately to remove approximately 10,000 litres of fuel contained in 45-gallon drums. These abandoned drums were on the verge of becoming compromised, posing a significant risk to the environment.

Regent Ventures Ltd. won the 2013 Leckie Award for outstanding and responsible practices in quartz mining. The company operates on the Red Mountain property, east of Dawson City. Ryan Coe and Jeff Bridge were in attendance to accept the award on behalf of the company.

Regent Ventures reclaimed several historically disturbed sites along their access route, removed an old placer camp, including structures, garbage and fuel drums, and reclaimed the area. At a nearby airstrip, they removed garbage and empty fuel drums from multiple users.

"The award recipients demonstrated commitment to reclamation, particularly to old sites from other users," Kent added. "This benefits the environment and also sets an example of responsibility and respect."

The awards are given in honour of Robert (Bob) E. Leckie, a Mayo mining inspector and innovator who was dedicated to the development of progressive land use practices for mining.

Twin Bears program celebrates 21 years in Yukon communities

Press release

WHITEHORSE—The popular Twin Bears program is back just in time for the holidays. The annual program donates toy teddy bears to children and elderly persons in need.

"The teddy bears donated through this program bring comfort to Yukoners throughout the year," Minister responsible for Yukon Liquor Corporation Brad Cathers said. "Donating a bear is a small gesture that can mean so much for people in need or distress regardless of their age."

For every teddy bear purchased at Yukon liquor stores, its twin is donated to organizations such as Yukon Emergency Medical Services, which hands out the bears to children and seniors who are sick, injured or experiencing a traumatic event.

"Emergency medical situations can be distressing for children and elderly patients," said Director responsible for Yukon Emergency Services Michael McKeage. "Our emergency medical responders know first-hand the hope and comfort a toy bear brings to a child when it is given to them in the back of an ambulance. This special friend can support patients, young and old, through their recovery."

This year the black and white bears are festively dressed in red sweaters with snowflake patterns embroidered on the front.

"The Twin Bears program has been supported by many Yukoners," Cathers added. "In the last 21 years, we have shared almost 11,000 bears with Yukon children and seniors."

The bears will be on sale starting November 22 for $12 at Yukon Liquor store locations in Whitehorse, Mayo, Dawson City, Haines Junction, Watson Lake and Faro.

Students encouraged to promote the arts in their home towns

The improv drama group.

Story & photos by Dan Davidson

Closing ceremonies for this year's edition of the Youth Art Enrichment program took place on November 9 at the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Hall and the Dänojà Zho Cultural Centre. Exhibits from the three of the four workshop sessions were set up at the hall, to be viewed before and after the closing feast and formalities, and then the group adjourned to the cultural centre, where George Maratos' Improv Intensive group put on a show for the delegates.

The centre had been the workshop space for the improv group, but the Oddfellows Hall and the Yukon School of Visual Arts (SOVA) provided pace for the other sessions.

Jesse Whitehead mentored the Digital Photography group at SOVA.

Meshell Melvin facilitated the creation of Mixed Media and Collage art in the Klondike Institute of Art and Culture classroom at the Oddfellows Hall.

Suzanne Paleczny taught Portrait Drawing and Painting in the ballroom upstairs.

This annual event is the creation of KIAC, which is the program arm of the Dawson City Arts Society (DCAS).

DCAS president Peter Menzies addressed the group after the supper, reminding them that this was the 13th running of the event by DCAS, which is now in its 16th year.

"We have three marquee events at the art institute. The film festival is held each Easter weekend; the (Riverside) arts festival is every Discovery Days, and this event, Youth Art Enrichment. I think we're the only arts organization that treats a youth event as significantly as anything else that we do. This week, you've been treated pretty much the same way as a visiting artist would be."

He described Dawson as a town "that's building a strong cultural cluster that allows things as diverse as film up the Dempster, TV out on the gold fields and local artists to put a show on every summer."

He listed the Writers Residence program at Berton House, the Artists and Songwriters program at Mccauley House and the exhibits at the ODD Gallery and Confluence Gallery as examples of the town's growing artistic impact.

Menzies recalled initial conversations about such possibilities going back as far as 1982 and how the various programs had developed over the intervening decades.

"It's a profound thing, and I'd like you to feel part of it," he said, encouraging the students to talk about the programs here when they return to their home communities.

Students come to this event from schools all over the Yukon, with attendance averaging about 50 each year.

Faculty members spoke warmly of their experience.

"I'd never really done anything exactly like this," said Jesse Whitehead. "It seemed whatever I threw at (my class) they would just take it. They were super keen, super easy, great young artists. It was exciting to see."

"This was my first time up here as an instructor," said Suzanne Paleczny, "and I had a great group of students to work with over the last few days. I'm really impressed with what they produced."

"People have the impression that doing art is sort of fun and frivolous, but when you get into it, and you spend six hours a day doing it like they've been doing for the last four days, it's a lot of work."

Meshell Melvin was the faculty veteran, having been at many of these events.

"I had a great group of students," she said. "I had nobody who said 'no, I don't wanna do that'; I had nobody dragging their bum around or not having an idea. Their challenge with me this week was ... to take their work further than they thought it would go, to continue past the point when they thought something was done. I felt that my team really did that and I'm really very proud of them."

George Maratos has also been at YAE before.

"Did you guys have a good week? As artists we had a great week, because you guys are the future, right, and if you're not taking programs like this then the art kind of dies, so it's really neat that you do participate, that you talk about it with other students, and that you keep the art growing."

Several students also took the podium to thank KIAC and the faculty and express their appreciation for the four-day event.

The program is sponsored annually by the Yukon government, the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in, KIAC, the Yukon Investment Fund and the Canada Post Community Foundation.

It should come as no surprise that Dan Brown's latest Robert Langdon thriller would already have a Wikipedia entry. Handy for a reviewer, I must say, since it lists the dozen or so major characters and spells their names for me.

We listened to this book several weeks ago while driving across British Columbia on Highway 16 and returning north on the Yellowhead out of Edmonton. It was a good travel companion and an apt one, seeing as so much of it was about travel.

Brown wisely returned to Europe for the setting of this novel. The Washington based setting of The Lost Symbol really didn't have as much sparkle as the first two Langdon books. It was also wise of him to chuck the plot pattern that had plagued all of his early books, that of having the villain of the piece suddenly emerge from the hiding place of having been one of the protagonist's trusted advisors or mentors.

In addition, while it helps to have read Dante Alighieri's Divine Comedy (especially The Inferno) and to have studied enough art history to be familiar with the work of Botticelli, it's not essential. All will be explained, sometimes a little too frequently, as the book's plot unravels.

Brown also dispensed with the standard Langdon opening, in which the professor is called upon to solve a puzzle; so we meet his hero lying in a hospital in Florence with a chunk of his memory missing and no idea how he got there. It appears that he has been shot, and it further appears that the extremely dangerous woman who shot him has tracked him down and has arrived at the hospital to finish the job.

Those things established, Langdon and Dr. Sienna Brooks begin what will become a roller coaster ride that rolls out in something close to real time. It seems like it ought to take more than just a bit more than a day for all the events in this novel to take place, but it also seems that, except for some flashbacks, that is exactly the case.

We are quickly launched on guided tours of Florence, Vienna and Istanbul, as Langdon seeks to uncover the meaning behind the image of the painting he has been given and its connection with the hallucinatory dream that is all he can recall of the previous day.

In the meantime, we get to know something of the workings of the Consortium, the powerful international organization which has been helping Bertrand Zobrist stay in hiding for much of the last year. As the book progresses the Provost, who heads this company, comes to realize that he has made a mistake.

Zobrist was obsessed with the problem of human population control, and had decided that, since the old Malthusian methods of hunger, war, and disease were not doing the job, something new, something with the impact of the Black Death, is needed to defuse the population bomb before it gets completely out of hand. He had presented this thesis to Elizabeth Sinskey, the head of the World Health Organization, before he vanished, and she has been trying to find and stop him ever since.

As it turns out, she did approach Langdon for help, and then he was injured. As the story progresses, we and Langdon realize that he had already solved some of the mystery before he was attacked and that he is solving it all over again, only this time while suffering from limited amnesia and a concussion.

BOOKENDS by Dan Davidson

Given that this is a Robert Langdon thriller, it is not a spoiler to reveal that there are several points in the novel where nearly everything that you thought you had figured out in terms of character motivations and the actual shape of the problem is stood on its head, reversed, and sent off in a completely different direction. That is one Brown pattern that has remained a constant through all of his books so far.

Lots of reviewers complain about Brown's awkward style. It's not so obvious when the book is read by as good a narrator as Paul Michael. My main complaints would be the seemingly endless repetitions of Langdon's dream and the frame-by-frame revelation of the video that Zobrist left for the Consortium to release to the public. It's that video that makes the Provost decide he has made a serious mistake in honouring his contact with his client.

Unlike Brown's three previous novels, the antagonist in this story is not driven by a religious mania. Quite the opposite, in fact. His solution to the problem that terrifies him is cold bloodedly rational, and he does what he does with the very best of intentions, no matter how extreme his solution might be.

The ending will leave you wondering if he might not have been right.

Proposing World Heritage Status for Trondek-Klondike

by Dan Davidson

The headline on the front page of the July 24, 1997 edition of the Klondike Sun boldly proclaimed, "Berton Proposes Dawson for World Heritage Site Status." The "Berton" was Pierre Berton, of course, Dawson's most famous living son at the time and author of some 60 books, half of which touched on the North to some degree, most notably in the Governor General's Award winning volume Klondike: The Last Great Gold Rush, 1896-1899.

It wasn't the first time that anyone had suggested the Klondike should be recognized under the UNESCO World Heritage Convention, but it was the loudest statement at a significant time, during our Centennial years.

Berton had contacted me about a week before I wrote the article to set up telephone interviews with himself and Pierre Dalibard. Dalibard had been with Parks Canada when the Klondike National Historic Site was created back in the 1960s. He had later been the executive director of Heritage Canada, a non-governmental organization, and was then a professor of historical conservation at the University of Montreal.

He also used to sit on the UNESCO board that governs WHS selection.

Berton had already approached the Dawson City town council of the day and Mayor Glen Everitt had taken his letter to councillors who were still excited about the Gold Rush Centennials, which were then approaching their 1998 climax, having begun in 1996.

Berton proposed that "Dawson qualifies under at least two of the six cultural criteria for inclusion on the World Heritage List, which is divided into physical and cultural categories."

Dawson would be a cultural site, which would, according to the text from UNESCO's own website:

"ii. exhibit an important interchange of human values, over a span of time or within a cultural area of the world, on developments in architecture or technology, monumental arts, town-planning or landscape design..."

"iv. be an outstanding example of a type of building or architectural or technological ensemble or landscape which illustrates (a) significant stage(s) in human history..."

During my interview from Ottawa on July 10, Dalibard suggested that Berton was being too modest and that another criterion also would apply, covering the contributions of Robert Service, Jack London and Berton himself.

"vi. be directly or tangibly associated with events or living traditions, with ideas, or with beliefs, with artistic and literary works of outstanding universal significance..."

The World Heritage Site program was established by the Convention Concerning the Protection of the World's Cultural and Natural Heritage, adopted by the United Nations Educational Social and Cultural Organization in 1972. The actual decision would be made by the International Council on Monuments and Sites (ICOMOS).

Should Dawson City or the Klondike ever be approved, it would join 981 properties on the World Heritage List. The UNESCO website lists 759 cultural, 193 natural and 29 mixed properties. The cultural list has nearly doubled since 1997.

In Canada there are currently 15 sites, established between 1978 and 2013. They include places like L'Anse aux Meadows National Historic Park (the site of the first Viking settlement in Newfoundland), Dinosaur Provincial Park in Alberta, the historic area of Quebec City and the old town section of Lunenburg in Nova Scotia, just to name a few. The most recent is the Red Bay Basque Whaling Station in Labrador.

Public debate on the merits of this proposal have waxed and waned over the 16 years since Berton's proclamation. Future columns on this topic will explore some of the history and implications.

(Editor's note: This column is the first of three that originally appeared in slightly different form in What's Up Yukon.)

Air North wins flight appeal for Fairbanks-Dawson route

Air North's Friday scheduled flight from Whitehorse to Old Crow via Dawson touches down at Dawson's airport just a few minutes past 10:30 on the morning of November 22.

Reports from the Whitehorse Star, Yukon News and CBC North indicate that Air North will indeed be flying Holland America clients between Fairbanks and Dawson next summer instead of busing them over the Top of the World and Alaska Highways.

Holland America announced the decision to phase out its Top of the World and North Alaska Highway coach tours last summer, indicating that they would prefer to shuttle tourists to and from Dawson by air and give them an extra day here instead of a day on a bus.

Initially, the U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) agency denied Holland America Line the option of using Air North to shuttle as many as 19,000 tourists between Dawson and Fairbanks during the next summer season.

The company projected nine flights weekly, which the CBP maintained would strain its staff beyond what the agency could handle, nor were they initially willing to reallocate staff to Fairbanks to handle the increase in their original response.

It took a very brief discussion on November 12, for Dawson's council to pass the following resolution: "That Council opposes the recent denial of the Dawson-Fairbanks tourists flights and supports the appeal of the decision as undertaken by Air North."

"I have been in contact with the folks at Air North and told them we'd be dealing with this tonight," said Mayor Wayne Potoroka.

"I've received an email from folks at Northern Vision (Developments) to say that they ere very concerned about this decision. They own a hotel here now (the Downtown Hotel, in partnership with the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in) and they want to make sure that this market is sustained."

Air North appealed the decision, as did U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski.

Most recent reports indicate that CBP has decided to move three of its 26 positions from Anchorage to Fairbanks in order to handle the extra work. One position was vacant already, and it is expected that two others will be by the time they are needed in Fairbanks.

In the meantime, Air North has also announced that it will be inaugurating a twice-weekly flight to Yellowknife and Ottawa early in 2014.

*May your spirit soar in freedom
From the fears that gripped so tight
May you find the peace you searched for
As you wandered lost in the night
I'll wear your memory proudly
My only brother, my true friend
May my love for you reach Heaven above
Until we meet again.
Gone but not forgotten.*

Forever missed by your sister Lisa and by your brother-in-law Kevin, and niece and nephew Mollie and Keenan.

Words of Gratitude from the Snider Family

The Snider family would like to thank the community of Dawson for supporting us as we accompanied our Dad, Ken Snider, to his home death. Happy Makes Lucky

My name is Craven Clutterbuck and I'm having a spate of bad luck these days, despite practicing my superstitions.

When reality cannot be explained, people refer to luck. Sometimes it's good luck, sometimes its bad luck, and sometimes there is no luck at all. I'm puzzled how people can have no luck at all.

My wife Harriet and I live a few doors down from the Robert Service cabin on Eighth Avenue in Dawson City. Our house has white beveled siding, which Harriet demands that I paint every two years to keep up appearances. The trim is a nice sea green that she let me pick out myself.

I'm taller than average, and skinny. My collarbones stick out under my shirt. I don't mind people calling me skinny because it is the truth. I inherited my father's red hair, which stands straight up like an orangutan's, and my wire-rimmed glasses sit high on a long broken nose that never healed straight. I wouldn't say I was handsome, but a girl in high school told me I had nice eyes.

I've studiously recorded a long list of superstitions that have been created to bring good luck. All one thousand forty-seven of them are kept in a secretary's steno pad. Some are short: number 387 says, "Sing 'Stewball' when you turn the months on a calendar"; and some (like number 897: "The six things you have to do after a dentist pulls your tooth") are long. Number 35 says, "For really good luck, eat only with a knife."

Eating was an Olympic event for me; I could balance eight peas on a knife and eat Jell-O 1-2-3 easily. When I was a bachelor, I entertained in the Flora Dora Café at mealtime.

I read the Whitehorse Star from back to front, and from bottom to top. It was all for good luck, and I firmly believe that a gold nugget on the windowsill will keep lightning out. I've never been struck yet.

My bad luck started when my dear brother Buford collapsed packing the hind quarter of the biggest moose seen in years, out of the bush to the Dempster Highway.

"That moose was a monster," said Beth, Buford's widow, "I told my Buford to take it easy but he wanted to get home for Hockey Night in Canada."

"I'll just grab this last hind quarter, honey-bun then we can get out of here. It's steak and hockey tonight!"

The next bad luck was when I married Harriet, a divorcee with a heart of stone. I think I proposed because Buford was always encouraging me to get married.

"You're depriving women of a very good husband, Craven," he said.

I should have paid more attention to Harriet's husband, Robert, who skedad-dled after twenty-five years of marriage. He was a good, hardworking man who loved his children and would have loved Harriet if she had let him.

"Damn woman wouldn't take an ounce of affection from me and didn't give none either."

Shortly after our marriage Harriet pulled me into the kitchen and sat me down. She removed her gold-rimmed glasses, straightened her black-grey speckled hair bun, pursed her lips and said, "Craven, I read your steno book and these superstitions have to go! Hop scotching down the street while singing a ditty about a man from Keno City is not acceptable. And stop eating with a knife! No sensible man eats with a knife."

My head spun a hundred miles an hour, my blood pressure shot up, and my heart sank. I went into a bit of a shock.

"Harriet," I pleaded, "I know I'm superstitious, but that's me that's who I am everybody knows that. It's all about luck. If I stop my superstitions disaster looms. I'm sure I bring good luck to the family."

"Well that's just being superstitious. You better stop or there will be no peace around here until you do. Maybe you should see the doctor."

Then she scooped up my steno pad and threw it in the cook stove firebox.

"No!" I screeched, dropping to my knees and reaching and grabbing my book, slapping it on my knee to put a flame out.

"If you don't want it burnt, then keep it out of my sight and stop this nonsense."

From then on it caused me great stress not to have the freedom to be myself.

I was resting in the sitting room, crossing my fingers twice on both hands, and tapping out whatever song came to mind, which was often "Blueberry Hill" by Louie Armstrong, when I realized I needed a friend's help.

I would talk to Victor, the gypsy, and maybe his wife Mimosa. Victor was smart. He knew stuff and understood what I was all about.

"This man, Craven, very charmed in my country we respect man's respect for superstition."

This was a great encouragement to me.

Victor Caldararu was married to Mimosa and lived in the north end of town. He looked like a gypsy should. He was thin, dark, with wavy hair kept in place with Brylcreem and a hair net. He had a heavy mustache, a gold front tooth, and an accent. He was as handsome as Valentino, and the women in town stole a glance at him when he walked by. The men didn't like him for that.

coming will vanish if I stop, and any bad luck will run over me like a runaway White Pass & Yukon Route freight train."

"It's okay Victor fix. You watch and see. We have meeting here in my house to-night. Tell wife you go out walk dog."

"I don't have a dog."

"Cat?"

"No."

"Mouse?"

"No."

"I'm only kidding. Tell wife you just go out visit friend."

"Okay," I said.

"But not say 'girlfriend.' Wife get angry."

Later that evening, Victor and I sat in his parlor.

"How old you are?" he asked.

"Forty-nine."

Victor took a burnt cork and wrote "49" on the left side of my forehead.

"How old Harriet?"

"Forty-seven."

Victor wrote "47" on the other side of my forehead. He then took a handful of white flour and sprinkled it on my head and shoulders. I sneezed and sucked some in and started to choke.

"Okay, okay, take it easy we be done shortly. Flour make pure for next thing that happens."

Mimosa walked in carrying an oil lamp. She had been reading on the porch. The light shone off her face and I thought how beautiful she was.

Victor read my thoughts, and without looking up said, "Yes, she is."

Mimosa took one look and said, "Oh my, the lucky charm," and walked to the kitchen.

Victor shrugged his shoulders and took a handful of pink dried fireweed from a paper bag and said, "Craven, hold out hand."

"I hope this works."

"Works every time," Victor said as he filled my outspread hands.

"Now rub on face, like washing face."

I rubbed the fireweed on my face and the white fluffy parts went up my nose. I started to sneeze again and rub my eyes.

"That itches," I said.

Victor closed his eyes and spoke rapidly in Romani. Then he finished with, "Doda, doda, all doda day."

This made me suspicious.

"You're not just making this up, are you?"

"Don't worry, I tell you this work every time."

We went out to the garden and washed my head using the garden hose. On the way home I couldn't help but hop, skip, and jump along the road.

The next morning at breakfast, unsmiling Harriet, sitting as stiff as a board in her nightgown, shrilled, "Craven, for some reason I feel lucky. I think I will get my hair done and see if I can buy a new dress at Cooper's Grocery and Hardware store."

As she got up from the table, she spilt the salt. She picked up a pinch and threw it over her shoulder.

I looked on in amazement.

She then stopped in the middle of the room, with her back to me, snapped her fingers rapidly numerous times on one hand and then numerous times on the other, and then shuffled her feet and moved her hips back and forth.

Is she dancing? I wondered, but there was no music.

She whirled around. "My word, I don't know what has come over me I just felt lucky to do that. You never mind, Craven, and while I'm gone make sure you cut the front lawn and weed the flowers."

When Harriet went out, she turned the door handle four times to the left, then four times to the right, jumped back like she was doing the hokey pokey, opened and closed the door until she had finished singing "Happy Birthday," then high-stepped over the sill and walked to the front gate singing "La Marseillaise."

I finished weeding and was taking a break with a cold glass of lemonade before cutting the lawn. The phone rang.

"Hello, this is Craven," I said.

"Hello, Craven, this is Mr. Cooper down at the store. I think you had better come up town and take your wife home."

"Oh no. Has something happened to Harriet?"

"Well, we don't know. She came in shopping and took all the red licorice sticks out of the jar and lined them up on the counter. Then she took the black licorice sticks and sang, "Doda, doda" to each one before putting them in the red licorice jar. When I asked her what the hell she was doing, she said it was all about good luck and she had to do it. Well, it ain't good luck to me when my licorice gets handled, because customers won't buy it."

"I'll come looking for her right away, Mr. Cooper, and I'll be good for any damaged licorice sticks."

Enchanted by the Lake

by Antonio Maschio
Verona, Italy

When you are unlucky
every day is like Sunday every day is silent and gray

Let me rest, let me sleep your loving, trembling sea otter embrace keeps me warm and safe

Forgotten as the shining mantle who covered the secrets

Standing on the beach with my heart in my hand staring at the lake staring at the sand

While the glacier is singing with his hoarse thundering melting inspired voice making all so unreal.

Of an endless struggle between flowers and ice,
between luck and misfortune,

I think that anyway
what difference does it make?
It makes none,

He has the wish to heal you do not fear,
He has the will to heal you do not fear .

Will be heard one more time will be sung once again,
will float in the ice,
will be buried in the moss.

'Cause she is gone and I am feeling very tired and sad tonight.

From the dark deepness
of an old alpine lake,
the old Celtic song of a forgotten bard

"Happy Makes Lucky" continued from previous page...

"Good!" and he hung up the phone.
I stood to go but the phone rang again.
I answered it. "Hello, this is Craven."
"Craven, this is Walter at the Dawson City General Store."
I had an idea of what was coming. "Yes, Walter, how can I help you? Is it my wife?"
"You can come and get your wife before she wrecks my store and chases all my customers away."
I jumped on my bike and headed to the store. When I arrived, Harriet was standing in the canned-food aisle, stacking cans from the biggest to the smallest. A small crowd had gathered at one end and was watching and laughing.
"What are you doing here, Craven? You certainly haven't finished your chores yet," she said.
"No, dear, I haven't but I think you should come home with me."
Harriet didn't argue. She was tired of shopping and needed to put her feet up.
The next day Harriet stood on the front lawn and ordered, "Craven, go in the back shed and get a horseshoe, a hammer, and some nails. We are going to hang it over the door, open-side-up, to catch all the good luck in the world."
Two days later a registered letter came in the mail.
"Here. Sign this here," Fritz the postmaster instructed.
The envelope contained a cheque for $8,000 from a lawyer in Toronto who wrote, "Aunt Clare has passed away and left part of her estate to Craven Clutterbuck."
Aunt Clare was my mom's sister. I only met her once, but she was a kind old lady.
"Half of that money is mine, Craven, I'm your wife," Harriet said, clearing the dinner dishes off the table.
I cashed the cheque and gave Harriet $4,000. She didn't thank me.
Two days later, another letter arrived from a lawyer on behalf of Harriet's former husband, Robert, demanding $8,000 in settlement of the property Harriet kept when they divorced.
"Men!" said Harriet, and demanded my share of the money so she could pay the lawyer.
Again, she didn't thank me.

"Bad luck," said Victor, who was digging potatoes in his garden. Sometime you have bad luck, sometime good, sometime it balances out. Do you know what make good luck?
"What?"
"Happy. Happy makes good luck. Skookum Jim and George Carmacks only found gold because Kate Carmacks was happy lady she was born happy. Happy makes lucky then they find gold. You want good luck, then keep happy. Harriet unhappy, bad luck. Craven happy, makes good luck. But with one against the other, you have no luck at all."
"Aha! Eureka! I found it an answer," I said, lifting my eyes skyward and thanking the lucky gods that everyone knew lived in the clouds.
"Tell Harriet that God like happy. Maybe that changes her," Victor said.
At dinner I told Harriet about Kate Carmacks and what Victor said about God liking happy people. Harriet was a church lady and always did like money, so if it pleased the Lord and paid to be happy, she would be. It worked because a letter arrived from Robert's lawyer saying a miscalculation had been made in the settlement. Enclosed was a $4000 cheque.
Harriet didn't share the refund with me.
"Yours was the money they kept," she said.
As long as she is happy, I thought.
I did try to overcome my superstitions. I ate with a knife and fork and took the gold nugget off the windowsill. I put the steno pad of superstitions away. For now anyways.
I started a new book titled Laws of the Klondike. The first law was "Happy makes lucky," and the second one was "Never pack more moose than you can carry." The third one had to do with happiness being more important than appearances.
Over time, the first two laws were combined into "Pack a happy moose." No one really knows why or what it meant, but it's still used today.

(Ed. Note: David has won this contest a couple of times and his winning stories were included in his first published book, Talking at the Woodpile. Since he has also produced a novel, Haines Junction.)

The Authors on Eighth annual writing contest asks contestants submit to work in the style of one of four writers: Jack London, Robert Service, Pierre Berton or Dick North. It can be prose, fiction, non-fiction or poetry. This year the subject was luck.
There were 18 entries from all over Canada, the United States, England and Italy. All entries will be published in coming issues of the Sun.
The Authors on Eighth writing contest is held in cooperation by the KVA, Parks Canada and the Klondike Sun. Judges included the current Berton House writer-in-residence and local writers.

THIS IS JUST MY OPINION

by Al Sider

Where is the Garden of Eden?

The Garden of Eden is discussed by Theologians and Scientists alike. According to Theologians, the Garden of Eden was a real perfect garden, created and designed as home for mankind. According to mainstream Science, The Garden of Eden was only a mythical, fanciful location, never really having form or substance, as it fails to fit with evolution. Science claims that man originated in locations of what is now, Southern Africa, in the Savannahs. According to Biblical Scholars, and the Bible itself, man was created, then placed in the Garden. I fail to perceive how this does not fit with evolution, but my topic is not in regards to evolution or creation, but rather the actual physical location of this most famous Garden.

The Book of Genesis, in the Bible, is the only book which I know of that provides the exact location of this wonderful Garden, and according to the boundaries specified in that text, Eden was much larger than many think today. The Biblical text tells us, in chapter 2 of the book of Genesis, that a single river went out of the garden which separated into four different rivers. Now, it must be understood, that this description describes a period of earth history which was before continental drift began.

This idea is derived from the preceding chapter of Genesis, chapter 1, which tells us that when God made the land to appear, it was all just one continent (see Gen. 1:9). If this idea is the actual way it was when God made the Garden of Eden, then this description is quite plausible. It tells us that four rivers were joined from the midst of Eden, and flowed throughout Eden, and these rivers were, by my understanding, the boundaries of the Garden. This does not state, nor suppose, that the Garden encompasses all of the land which is bordered by these rivers, but that at least part (if not all) of the Garden lay along some portion of each of these rivers.

It is possible to fully identify at least three of the four rivers, the fourth may only be a supposition. The first river named is Pison, King James Version (KJV) or Phison Douay - Rheims Version (DR) and this river is the only one which cannot be exactly identified positively. As a result, I will attempt to identify it after I show the locations of the other three rivers.

The second river is called Gihon (KJV), or Gehon (DR) and is a river that surrounds Ethiopia. There is a combination of Rivers that actually surrounds Ethiopia, (and these rivers actually connect and appear as one) though not completely, and they are, the Blue Nile, Harer River, and/or possibly the Awash River. These may make up the Western most boundary. But it must also be realized, that the Ethiopia of today, may not be the Biblical Ethiopia. Yet again, if this description is of the time before Continental Drift, it is possible that these rivers may have been just one river. It must also be understood, that the flow of rivers may not have been as they are today. Rivers which flow North to South today, may have in prehistory, flowed instead South to North, this is impossible to determine. Likewise, rivers which flow today from East to West, may have flowed West to East.

The third river is called Hiddekel (KJV) or Tigris (DR) this river, as well as the last river still bear the same name today as in ancient times. The final river is the Euphrates, and these rivers, all four, at one time in earth's history, all flowed out of the Garden of Eden.

At this point, I will attempt to identify the first river listed, the Pison or Phison River. Based upon the geography of the middle East, the most likely candidate to the identity of this river can be none other than the, Karun River, as this river also surrounds a land rich in gold and precious stones. So, by the potential positions of all four of these rivers, I am led to the hypothesis that the Garden of Eden was located in the area now known as the Persian Gulf. It is recorded in the Biblical Text, that after the fall God placed a guard (an angel with a flaming sword) at the entrance of the Garden, to prevent man from again entering the Garden. Might the possibility exist that the "guard" was the continental drift, thus flooding the area which contained the Garden of Eden?

The Biblical Text does not tell us that man was created in the Garden of Eden, but that man was created elsewhere and placed in the Garden. Will Eden rise again? Absolutely. According to the Biblical Texts, there will be a "New Heaven and a New Earth" and it will be from this "New Earth" that Eden shall rise again, New and restored to its former beauty. Entrance into the Garden at that time, will not be restricted, and God will once again walk and commune among His creation. Am I correct in my hypothesis?

Only God knows for certain, but as always, this is just my opinion.
