Classical Music meets beat box for a fine evening

Classical music with a hiphop backbeat is not what you might usually associate with a sedate sounding string trio, but John Littlejohn (violin), Anthony Cheung (viola) and Alex Cheung (cello) manage to make it seem entirely natural. The only warning of the evening was given by Alex, who suggested that the beat-box noises they made to go with their playing might mean it would be best not to sit directly in front of them; there might be a bit of spray.

The Vancouver based trio performs as Infinitus, pleasing their audience with a mixture of classical standards and original jazz/hip-hop arrangements and compositions, as well as accepting the challenge of taking audience requests during the second half of their

They are touring the Yukon in support of their first selftitled CD. They have been working since they formed in 2008, and have had 700 outreach performances in schools, nursing homes, juvenile detention centres, and hospitals.

They performed to a full house at the Odd Fellows Hall in Dawson on September 16, wowing the crowd with their eclectic approach to the music and the fun that they were having performing together.

Infinitus are John Littlejohn (violin), and Anthony Cheung (cello) and Alex Cheung (viola).

The twin Cheung brothers met Littlejohn (his real name) while they were all studying at the University of Michigan. They are currently based in Vancouver, and perform regularly as part of the Vancouver Chamber Players Concert Series. They are currently on the faculty of the Thrive City String Academy and Boot Camp, the Saint James Music Academy, and the Vancouver Academy of Music.

During the week of Sept. 15-20 toured the Yukon, doing school and community performances in Dawson and Haines Junction. They also did educational outreach at the Yukon Arts Centre on Sept. 19 and a concert on Sept. 20.

Uffish Thoughts: Klondike Culinary Curiosities make it to the Small Screen

Story & Photos By Dan Davidson

Dawson was on TV again today and, while it was daytime television and a show I have never watched and am not likely to watch again, it was a rather enjoyable peek at Klondike agriculture, combined with that perennially gross favorite, the Sourtoe Cocktail.

The show was Steven and Chris, and the subject that headlined the show was food from Yukon (notably absent the definite article at all times), a spinoff from last summer's Yukon Culinary Festival, which visited Dawson, for the second time, on August 2 this year.

Dawsonites can be happy that, while much of the festival took place elsewhere, the television cameras paid particular attention to the Klondike farms and the show extolled the region's agricultural products. The Downtown Hotel's Sourdough Saloon was brim full of locals who turned out to watch the show at 2 o'clock. Some of them had actually watched it earlier at 1 o'clock on the town's cable service, which gets its CBC North from an earlier time zone.

"Culinary Adventurist"
Christian Pritchard toured at least two of the Klondike's farms during his visit here in August, spending time with both John Lenart and Lucy Vogt and rhapsodizing over their celery and tomatoes, as well as discussing the unique sun and soil features of the area which make for such good agriculture.

The viewing audience outside of Dawson may not have realized that he was at two different operations, but that's less of an issue than some of the silly things that get said about our area.

There was also some video from the festival itself, and the evening dinner of samples that was served at the Commissioner's Residence.

The show's cooking segment was awash with Klondike herbs, morel mushrooms, Arctic Char and all sorts of Yukon goodies, which Steven and Chris greeted with sheer ecstasy. Mind you, they can gush (and did in another segment) over paint samples, so a little less exuberance wouldn't have been out of place.

After the show had run through its fashion and home decorating segments, it ended on a high note with the serving of the Sourtoe Cocktail to Chris. The rite was administered by the reigning Sourtoe Captain, Terry Lee, who took up the post last year about two months before that fellow caused an international Internet storm by swallowing one of the toes on purpose.

Terry says he was flown to Toronto to film the segment on September 8th, returning to his Dawson post the very next day. He blames the quick trip for the lingering cold and cough that he can't seem to shake.

"It was fun," he told me.
"It was a ball. I really, really enjoyed it."

He enjoyed it so much that he managed to watch the show three times that day.

He put the hosts through all the paces, reciting the screed that goes with the toe, as he had done a month earlier with Pritchard and some of the other chefs who were in town for the festival. Pritchard did it again in Toronto, Terry said, just to show the hosts how it was done.

It was Chris who finally got up the nerve (after much protesting) to fill up the shot glass (with a double charge) accept the toe when Terry dropped it in, and down the liquor, making sure the "gnarly toe" touched his lips.

"I thought Steven was gonna do the Toe," Terry said, "and that Chris was gonna balk, but it was the opposite. I was really surprised."

After a little victory dance (imitating a victorious boxer) Chris recharged the glass and ran up to the studio audience where one of the ladies accepted the challenge and earned herself a certificate.

The look on the faces of the members of the audience told the tale of the crowd reaction. As much as they had been nearly drooling during the cooking segment, they grimaced during the rite of the Sourtoe.

I sure don't blame them.

Barry's sisters say Thanks

We are the sisters of Barry Fargey, who recently passed away at Strickland Lake, near Dawson City.

We made the journey to Dawson for his Celebration of Life and were overwhelmed by the warmth and generousity of the community who came together and provided him with such a great send off. We appreciate the efforts of the organizers, the t-shirt and button makers, the BBQers, the people who brought and/or served the food and tended bar, the musicians and the people who provided the sound equipment and stage, Parks Canada for the grounds, the provision of the boat, the people who stepped up and shared stories, and specifically: Carol, Carly, Lois, Dawn, Wayne, Martin, and Tommy. We are sure we must be leaving people out; there were so very many people that contributed, and we hope that they know how completely we appreciate all that was done.

The kindness of Brad, Triple J Hotel, and Wendy, Bamboo Peggy's, for the accommodations was unexpected and very appreciated as well.

A special thank you for all who welcomed us so warmly and shared a hug, a story and often a laugh. It was so special to meet the people that became his Dawson family and to hear how he had touched their lives. It is easy to see why he made Dawson his home

We left Dawson with many fond memories, despite the circumstances, and hopefully, some new friends.

Diane Davidson, Oshawa, ON Gerrie Fargey, Winnipeg, MB

Thank you!

Poetry Winner says "Thanks"

To the Citizens of Dawson, and especially Justine Hobbs and all the people at the KVA, the tour guides and all the actors and participants of Parks Canada, and the merchants, restaurants, and hoteliers in Dawson:

Thank you all so much for one of the best holidays and experiences I've had in many years!

This past June, my daughter and I spent a week in your great town, and did all the touristy things you're noted for.

We also got out and "on the town" and met a lot of real down-toearth people that treated us like we were friends, or better.

After winning last year's "Authors on Eighth" poetry contest, and knowing the theme for this years, I was on the search for anything that may help in composing a good story on a Dawson ghost. Alas, the entire time we were in Dawson, we were so busy enjoying ourselves, I had the worst case of "writers block" ever, and couldn't think of a single thing to put to paper.

It was only after getting back home in Grand Forks, with the deadline approaching, that I was able to reminisce about our trip and re-live so many of our adventures, that the poem for this year's competition started revealing itself to me. And yes, I did go on every tour, and walked down every street. I also spent most nights at Gerties enjoying the wine and the blackjack tables, and especially the dealers and other players. It honestly seemed as I'd been living in Dawson for years, not just an eager visitor.

I will be back. We are planning a trip for a couple years from now when they extend the Dempster to Tuk. I plan to bring our RV and drive to the Arctic Ocean (as well as some quality time in Dawson)

So once again, a really big thank you to all you folks in Dawson, and yes, I did become a member of Capt.'Dick's Sourtoe Club. Ahh, if I were only younger.....

Results of Wildlife Act charges heard in court August 26th (August 26, 2014) – Territorial based defence counsel. Judge Peter Chisholm ordered a B.C. resident to pay a total of $15,000.00 and a Montana resident to pay a total of $11,500.00 to the Yukon Fish and Game Association TIPPS fund after they pleaded guilty to charges arising from a hunt held off the South Canol Road in 2011.

The matters were originally set for four days of trial commencing August 26th. The sentences imposed were based on a joint recommendation from the Crown and the two B.C.-

The B.C. resident, a licenced guide in Yukon at the time. was guiding the non-resident Wyoming hunter back in 2011. They were accompanied by two other men, including a cameraman, and the hunter killed a caribou, sheep, moose and grizzly bear on a remote back pack hunt.

The caribou was photographed within minutes of the group landing by airplane to begin the hunt and was hunted and killed within about 1 1/2 hours after landing rather than the required 6 hours following their flight. The sixhour rule is aimed at ensuring fair chase and the offence is commonly referred to as hunting by aircraft. The hunter and guide initially claimed that the caribou was harvested the day after the party landed.

In addition, all the meat from the caribou and some of the meat from the sheep and moose was wasted.

The guide pleaded guilty to wasting the meat from a caribou, sheep and moose and to hunting by aircraft. In addition to the fines, the guide is prohibited from hunting or guiding in Yukon for 20 years.

The accompanying Wyoming hunter was fined $11,500.00 for wasting the meat of a moose and sheep and for hunting by aircraft. He is also prohibited from hunting in Yukon for 10 years. The hunter withdrew his application for return of the wildlife seized and all wildlife, including the trophies from the caribou, sheep, grizzly bear and moose seized by Conservation Officers in 2011 were ordered forfeit.

Yukon Distress and Support Line to Launch this Fall

WHITEHORSE, Yukon, September 10, 2014 - The Second Opinion Society is pleased to announce the launch of the Yukon Distress and Support Line, a toll-free Yukon-wide phone line focused on providing assistance, support and resource information for people in distress. The line, which is scheduled to start operation in November, has received financial contributions from the Bell Let's Talk Community Fund, Northwestel and Government of Yukon Health and Social Services.

"After-hours availability is currently a large gap in service for Yukoners," said Hailey Hechtman of Second Opinion Society. "This phone line is our effort to ensure a confidential, anonymous and safe space for anyone who is experiencing distress, in need of support or who is just looking for someone to listen to what's going on in their life. We feel that this line, which will be accessible throughout the Yukon, will be a valuable preventative and socially inclusive tool that opens up conversations around mental health and will be a useful resource for all the incredible community agencies working to promote wellness in our territory."

The Bell Let's Talk Community Fund has provided $30,000 to support the launch and ongoing operation of the Yukon Distress and Support Line.

'Since 2011, the annual Bell Let's Talk Community Fund has invested more than $4 million to support groups working to fight stigma and improve access to mental health care in communities in every corner of Canada," said Mary Deacon, Chair of Bell Let's Talk. "The Second Opinion Society is one of the almost 60 new organizations we're so proud to support in 2014 as they provide muchneeded help to people living with mental illness and the family and friends who care for them.'

Northwestel has made a $25,000 cash and value-in-kind commitment to supporting this important service. This contribution is part of Northwestel's ongoing efforts to support mental health organizations in the North. Northwestel's President and CEO, Paul Flaherty attended today's launch in Whitehorse. "This phone line will provide Yukoners with a resource for support which hasn't been available in the past," said Paul Flaherty, President and CEO of Northwestel. "Supporting the mental health community is very important to Northwestel. We are looking forward to having this important resource available in Yukon."

Government of Yukon Health and Social Services has committed to an $8,100, six-month contribution to support the line.

Dick & Jack & Friends

By Dawne Mitchell, Dawson City

Dick North and I are walking the dusty, gravel streets of Dawson City late one summer evening investigating the old buildings and sites that were related to the famous literary author, Jack London. The streets are quiet, most of the people at home or hunkered down in the rowdy saloons and dance halls. Spending their hard earned money. It's as bright as day, way past the midnight hour.

Dick is walking with a sturdy stick that he grips in his right hand. He's wearing a dark blue fleece vest over a light brown collared shirt. The insignia patch on his baseball style hat is from his Vietnam Regiment. The hat came from a summer reunion of the Regiment that Dick made a point of attending.

"It was so good to see the boys," was all he said about the reunion.

When I enquired how long he'd served in Vietnam his replied, "Even a day was too long."

Dick is a determined walker, long legged. "It helps me think," he says.

His mother was an award winning ballroom dancer.

We walk around the site of the old St. Mary's Hospital in the far north end of Dawson City, below the wide grey geological scar on the hill called the Moosehide Slide. St Mary's was built by Father William Judge, the "Patron Saint of Dawson".

"Father Judge was Jack's friend," states Dick. He suggests that Jack London's most famous short story "To Build A Fire" was probably inspired by a real incident experienced by Father Judge, as told to Jack London when he was an outpatient at the hospital, suffering from scurvy in the spring of 1898.

Dick was part of a group trying to get Father Judge canonized. As Dick is filling me in on this I get a sense of someone behind us. I turn slightly and see a small thin figure dressed in black at the base of the rock slide.

Jack's white canvas tent was set up close to the hospital, beside a cabin owned by the Bond brothers. The Bonds owned a dog named "Jack" that Jack London met while he was there. Jack the dog was part Saint Bernard, part Scottish Shepherd. It was a massive, one hundred and forty pounds of hardworking sled dog, with a gentle disposition. Jack London loved animals. He became so impressed with this dog that when he started writing back home in California, he wrote his bestselling novel, The Call of The Wild, inspired by this real dog, Dick shows me a picture of Jack the dog sitting on its huge haunches beside its master in front of the cabin below the Moosehide slide.

We hear a slow mournful howl wafting up the hill.

As we wander downtown I ask Dick why he became so interested in Jack London's history. I knew that he'd grown up reading Jack London stories and always dreamed of seeing the North country.

With his droll sense of humor he told me, "With a name like Dick North, I knew I had to go North."

I also knew that Dick had first heard about Jack London's cabin when he met the Burians at Kirkman Creek south of Dawson on the Yukon River. He was paddling his canoe, named Chestnut, from Minto Landing to Dawson in September, 1964. As fate would have it "or Jack London," Dick quips, the Burians were only at Kirkman Creek for a brief time to harvest potatoes.

"It was almost like Jack London was pulling me on the arm or something like that saying go in and say hello to those people".

Mrs Yvonne Burian mentioned the cabin on Henderson Creek where supposedly Jack London had lived the winter of 1897–98.

"If I had continued on to Stewart Island, the Burian's permanent home, I would more than likely not have met them

Dick and I are nearing the Red Feather Saloon on Third Ave. When Dick first photographed it in 1964, the windows were broken and boarded up. Lucky for Dawson, a benevolent local business man paid the taxes to save the building, then turned it over to Parks Canada to be rebuilt.

"Minnie Rosso owned

this when it was called The Hub,"explains Dick, "Miss Rosso married Charlie Meyers and eventually settled in Napa, California. Meyers was a close friend of Jack London's at Stewart Island and is mentioned in his "The Scorn of Women", "To The Man On Trail" and other stories.

It was early October, 1897 on Stewart Island, winter was just over the horizon and there was little time to lose. Jack's partner, Jim Goodman, found colors on the left fork of Henderson Creek. This news was good enough to stir London and two other men who had joined them on the island, Charlie L. Meyers and Elam Harnish, to head out for the left fork with Goodman as their guide. Their hike was no short walk. The mouth of the creek was about four miles from the cabin. It was another seven miles to the forks, and from there another two to three miles to the area on the left fork that they wanted to prospect.

Dick was really getting into the trails and trials of Jack and his friends on Henderson Creek, "a white hell of cold and frost", the slush ice in the river when they headed to Dawson to register their claims.

Wasn't Elam Harnish the name of Jack's fictional character in my favorite Jack London book, Burning Daylight I wondered out loud?

Of course Dick had the answer. "Yes, Elam Harnish was Jack's fictional hero of that bestselling novel. Harnish was an actual companion of London's on a number of hunting trips during the winter of 1897-98. He eventually moved to Fairbanks, Alaska, where a cabin of his is featured in a historical exhibit at Alaskaland."

It was impressive how Dick could answer any question I might throw at him. Almost as if he knew the characters personally, as his friends or acquaintances.

The thick lace curtain moves at a window of the Red Feather Saloon. A hand pulls it back, just a quiver, for an instant. Who is that peaking at us at this time of night? Dick has moved on.

Just down Third Avenue we come to the slightly sad, sagging, unoccupied structure of the Guns and Ammo building. This was the hardware store that Jim and Dan Goodman had operated, Jim having travelled into the Klondike with Jack London, and Dan having prospected with Merritt Sloper, a friend of Jack's.

Dick describes Jim Goodman as the hunter of the group, travelling over the Chilkoot Trail and down the Yukon River with Jack and the other partners.

"Jim and Dan prospected, mined and operated businesses in the Yukon and Alaska from 1897 to 1922. Dan Goodman had brought his daughter Zella to live with them. A wonderful piano player with a voice to match, she had often entertained at the Dawson Athletic Club and played piano to accompany the silent movies of the day." Dick went on to say that "Zella's piano was still in the building, albeit the worse for wear after having gone through three or four floods."

This piece of information was too tempting. I had to find a way to get into the building to see the piano.

Before I could ask what happened to the Goodman's, Dick had the answer, "They walked off and left their store stock and all to return to California.

"Years later a rumor began circulating that during the long nights of winter the neighbors could hear a woman singing and dancing in the deserted building."

I chuckled at this answer, too much to believe.
There was one more character to talk about, Jack's partner
Fred Thompson who was a customs broker in Dawson until 1913.

"Hey Dick, where did Fred Thompson live?" I ask as I walk back around the boarded up front of the Guns and Ammo building.

Dick isn't there. I look down the deserted streets. A dog barks, a light comes on in the apartments across the street, a vehicle drives past.

I'm clutching a book to my chest, Sailor On Snowshoes -Tracking Jack London's Northern Trail, by Dick North.

I inhale deeply, aware that I was always alone. Dick was never here on this quest. I was hearing his voice as I remembered it, rolling off the pages of the book, the last book he'd written, a book I'd read over and over, sometimes just to hear Dick's voice, to feel like I was part of the story.

So many questions still to ask. No chance now. Dick had passed away at the age of 85. I turn slowly to walk back to my life.

I'm just up Harper Street with a half twist back around. I glimpse a man walking with a stick the other way and I'm sure I catch a few chords of a soft, lilting woman's voice drifting down from the second story of the Guns and Ammo building with a tinkling of a piano chording along with her.

The Red "Surge" of Justice

(A ghostly victory in rhyme)

By H.E Hehn, Whitehorse

Softly danced the snow that night

Where softly falling footsteps

While underneath the northern

Began the tale that I now tell.

Though not a man nor beast nor child

Did stir beneath that night so cold.

The wolf did howl his song so wild

His primal call from times of old

There came a sudden blast so fierce

It broke the perfect solitude, And as the shot the night did pierce

The moon looked on as though subdued.

T'was then that just one single

Dragged by thirteen raving husky dogs,

Yukon Distress and Support Line to Launch this Fall cont'd from p. 5

"We recognize the value in this kind of after-hours service for Yukoners in crisis. The support line will complement other services currently available in the territory. We appreciate the efforts of all partners to make this important mental health initiative happen," said Minister of Health and Social Services Doug Graham.

In addition, local architectural firm Kobayashi + Zedda will provide space for the support line to operate.

The Yukon Distress and Support Line project is being led by the Second Opinion Society. The line will be volunteer-run and will operate nightly between 7pm and 3am. Volunteer training will be offered by Distress Centres of Ottawa & Region in late October.

Experimenting with narrative voices at Berton House

Anik (A-neek) See, the 68th Berton House Writer in Residence, spoke to an audience of about 15 locals and visitors at the Dawson Community Library about the work she has been accomplishing while she was here during the summer.

See is a Canadian freelance writer, radio producer and translator living in The Netherlands. She is the author of three books, has contributed to many magazines, and produced award-winning radio for Radio Netherlands Worldwide, ABC, the CBC and Monocle as well as National Geographic, The Walrus, Brick, Prairie Fire, the Fiddlehead, Geist, grain, The National Post, Toronto Life and, as a contributing editor, in Outpost Magazine.

Her writing, both fiction and non-fiction, has appeared in many journals and magazines, and she has been nominated for numerous awards. The June 2014 Walrus has "The Groundskeeper", her visit with the man who tends the World War II graves at Bény-sur-Mer in France, near Juno Beach. The footnote mentioned that she would be spending the summer in Dawson.

She lives in Amsterdam with her partner, artist Walter van Broekhuizen, and their son. She has done ten residencies in other settings, and prefers to have them in sites away from cities, so Berton House has been ideal for her.

See launched her residency quickly. She arrived just before the Yukon River Quest floated into town and was so excited by this that she bundled her partner and son, who had come to visit for part of her stay, into a canoe and spent two weeks running the river from Whitehorse to here.

"I thought I would come up here and work on a book length project," she said, "but it turns out I've been working on a series of essays which are, at the moment, not related, but that doesn't mean that that can't change.

"It's quite unusual for me to Anik See read at the Dawson Community Library in mid-September and read at the Whitehorse Public Library on September 25.

work on a number of things simultaneously. I tend to focus on one thing and write until I'm sick of it and then start on the next one. I expect the change has to do with the lack of distractions in Dawson, the quiet and also the inspiring scenery and the landscape."

She's calling the result "fictional essays" and she read two of them to the assembled audience.

The first excerpt was from a piece called "Nostalgia", presented in the second person, so that you the reader, are asked to put yourself in the place of the narrator and react as if you might have experienced or thought some of the things in the piece.

It included reactions to a variety of scenes and sounds in places as diverse as Venice, a cabin retreat in Iceland and Robert Service's Cabin, which is across 8th Avenue from Berton House.

Her second reading of the evening was from the piece she had originally come here to work on, about her mother's family tree and how it relates to her own life choices. It was called "Gone" and a lot to do with the malleability of memory and begins with her admission that most of the things she thought she knew about her grandparents from when she was a child don't seem to bear much resemblance to what other members of her family recall.

It also dealt with questions of identity, an interesting issue for a non-resident Canadian citizen who has a child and is living with a man, the father of her child, to whom she is not married, so there are a bunch of relationships that need explaining whenever she travels with just her son.

It was an interesting evening and the readings prompted a lot of discussion over tea, coffee and cookies when she finished.

Council of Northern Economic Developers seeks to build connections

The Council of Northern Economic Developers (CNED) was formed in 2011 as an affiliate of the Economic Developers Association of Canada (EDAC). Over the last few years CNED has been building capacity to do something bigger than just local meetings. The result, coordinated by Dawson's very experienced Across the River Consulting, was the "Community Economic Development-Lessons Learned" conference held in Dawson from September 10 to 12.

"We have done courses before," said council president Michael Pealow, "but this is the first time there has ever been a conference of this nature for people working in economic development in the Yukon."

Why do this now? Pealow warmed to that topic.

"We have some amazing things happening in all the communities across the Yukon with respect to economic development, but seldom do we have the opportunity to come together and share what we're doing, share what we've learned, share our successes and share our failures, so that we have an opportunity to learn from each other. Also (we need to) to build connections with each other so that we have those networks where we can ask each other for help, advice or ideas, for whatever it is that we need so that we can do our jobs better building our communities."

That philosophy governed how the sessions were set up and what community presenters were asked to do.

"We designed this conference to be an engaging conference, one where people could share honestly what they thought. Even in the community presentations we specifically asked people not to just go up there and tell us how great they were, but to tell us what works and what doesn't."

"There were a lot of great ideas, but one of the biggest highlights for me was seeing connections between people that are actually helping to move projects forward, fostering new projects that are going to benefit communities. One example was when we had a presentation ... on the new federal greenhouses program and there are people now that have an understanding of it. They're going to tap into it and that'll help address issues like food security in communities and potentially generate other opportunities."

Choosing a location was part of the strategy.

"We intentionally chose to have the conference in a community, rather than in Whitehorse. When you're in a community you have the opportunity to build those connections with each other."

The planning also included opportunities to simply explore Dawson and perhaps drop a little cash along the way - do some shopping, take in the sights, visit Gerties, be tourists as well as delegates.

"We're economic developers," Pealow said. "It would be hypocritical of us to come to a community and not provide some sort of community benefit from the conference.

"Dawson has been a fantastic

In the future there is an Economic Developers of Canada conference coming to the Yukon. That will bring upwards of 300 delegates to the territory.

"The conference theme will be that what makes you different is a strength. So many communities try to be like every other one. There's some down south that you drive through them and you can't tell them apart any more. Those communities are losing their identities, whereas you have a community like Dawson, Watson Lake, Burwash Landing or Old Crow that have very strong identities. It's the differences, the historical and cultural differences that result in things like the trails in Carcross."

"I know that it sometimes frustrates people, the building codes and restrictions on building here - but retaining that character, that charm in Dawson - where would Dawson be without that?"

That attitude tied in very nicely with keynote speaker Maury Forman's (Senior Manager for the Washington State Department of Commerce) upbeat presentation, "Economic Development: Know It When You See It."

Part of the conference was CNED's annual general meeting, at which the new executive was elected. It consists of President: Michael Pealow, Treasurer: Norman Eady, Secretary: Jordan Stackhouse, and directors Blair Hogan, George Privett, Jonathan Steele, Mike Kokiw and Wilf Carter.

Public review of recycling system changes

The Government of Yukon wants to hear from you on its plans to modernize recycling regulations in the territory. The proposed changes affect the Beverage Container Regulation and the Designated Materials Regulation.

The changes aim to increase the diversion of recyclable materials from our landfills and will better cover the costs of handling, processing and transporting these materials. You can provide comments online or by email, fax or mail. A public meeting is scheduled in Whitehorse for October 29, 2014 at the Kwanlin Dün Cultural Centre, 3 to 8 p.m.

The deadline for comments is November 21, 2014.

REM returns to Robert Service and Dawson for a second year

Story & Photos By Dan Davidson

The second edition of the Rural Experiential Model (REM) had students from all the rural high schools in the territory gathered in Dawson City this week for five days of quite different educational activities.

In the Robert Service School itself a number of activities were under way.

In the Home Economics room the FEAST (Foods Education and Service Training) group was preparing meals for the 109 students and their teachers and mentors who were taking part in REM courses elsewhere.

Students arrived on Monday from eight schools, Del Van Gorder (Faro), Eliza Van Bibber (Pelly Crossing), JV Clark (Mayo), Robert Service (Dawson), Ross River School, Tantalus (Carmacks), St. Elias (Haines Junction), and Watson Lake Secondary School.

In the school's woodshop students were designing and creating longboard (skateboards).

In the music room and ancillary room students were working on drum beat patterns and learning how to play the

Two groups had already met in the Ancillary Room and had headed out into the community, one group to study Gold Rushes: Past, Present and Future, with the aid of Parks Canada interpreters; the other to walk Out of the Land, guided by local and visiting First Nations representatives.

Across town at the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Carpentry Shop students were pursuing a practical project related to the use of their ubiquitous iPods and combining First Nations'

Not too far away at the Yukon order of Pioneers Hall another group was working on Hair and Aesthetics.

At the Community Gospel Chapel on Fifth Avenue a quartet of students were working on making quilts, while just down the street at the Curling Club another group was busily making remote controlled robots.

Circulating amongst all the groups was the final one. Armed with cameras and audio equipment the REM Reporters were tasked with preparing reports and interviews from each day of the REM, bringing all that material back to their HQ at the Odd Fellows Hall and turning it into video reports for the rest of the groups to see later in the day.

The daytime sessions add up to 28 hours of dedicated class time, buts students also have to participate in 15 hours of evening activities. There were twenty one different evening programs lined up and students had to choose to be in three of them. Completing all these requirements during the week earned them two Fine Art or Applied Skill credits towards their high school diploma.

That fact, along with the wide variety of activities that not all of these schools have enough staff and students to offer, is one of the key features of the REM program, which grew out of a Rural Equity Action Plan developed by Yukon Education, administrators and teachers two years ago, and piloted at Robert Service School a year ago and again at Tantalus School in the spring.

It's important to the program to have the sessions take place during the more temperate seasons of the year so that not everything has to happen indoors.

This year the May session will be held in Watson Lake.

The four guiding principles underlying the REM are stated in a Yukon Education memo.

The plan is to:

- support building capacity and collaboration among rural
- increase course options available to rural students;
- support multiple pathways for student success;
- · create sense of community and opportunity for students to build relationships across rural

That this plan has more than a little appeal for schools in less urban setting is underlined by the fact that a contingent of teachers from English speaking schools in rural Quebec has been in Dawson for the entire week, not only taking notes, but participating in the sessions and preparing to take a report back to their own school district.

That Yukon Education is sold on the idea is clear in that the department increased the number of students attending from 73 last year to 109 this year and added course options to the program.

Minister Elaine Taylor attended part of last year's REM and in a press release about this year's event said,

"The Northern REM is a unique, experiential approach that enables students to pursue their personal learning interests and to connect with their peers in other Yukon communities," Taylor stated. "We are proud to provide this opportunity to bring together students from across Yukon to participate in another round of engaging, hands-on workshops for trades, arts and culture at this REM in Dawson City."

•FEAST -Lunches for each day were prepared by the FEAST group.

- Aesthetics Hair dressing is not just for girls.
- Guitar- Steve Slade discusses guitar theory and practice.
- Native Art -This hole will allow the iPods to project images when the whole thing is assembled.
- Quilts Quilt work is under way here.

Rockin' the Blues at the Rectory

Story & Photos By Dan Davidson

Queenie and one of her Bs buzzed before a delighted audience of a few dozen fans at Stringer House (the Anglican Rectory) in Dawson on September 17.

Queenie is the name the mult-genre'd Barbara Chamberlin performs under when she's in a bluesy mood, as she was when she put together her fourth CD, Boomerang Girl, which she and ace guitarist Terry Robb have been highlighting in a series of living rooms for the last little while in Mayo, Dawson, and locations around Whitehorse.

Queenie is a natural when it comes to pleasing an audience and has a knack with all sorts of music. Check out her website and you can listen to (or buy) all three of her previous albums. Most of the tunes from this house concert seemed to come from two latest albums.

Chamberlin spent most of the two hours behind her keyboard (as piano and organ) but stepped out front for a flute instrumental (that felt a little like Ian Anderson to this listener) and strapped on a guitar for some of the material in the second set. Terry Robb proved himself a master of the frets as he followed her through a set list that was mostly bluesy, but veered off into rock 'n' roll and reggae from time to time. For the guitarists in the audience he was a bit of distraction, of the "how does he do that?" variety.

Harmonica George
McConkey joined the duo for a number of tunes in the second set and the three traded guitar, harp and keyboard solos on several numbers, to the delight of the audience.

Queenie and a whole bunch of her Bs were live at the Old Firehall in Whitehorse on Thursday evening, Sept. 25, after which the stripped down duo performed still more concerts in both Riverdale and Atlin, finishing up at the Globe Theatre on September 27.

Any of these shows would have been worth the price of admission.

Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in and Yukon College to plan teaching and working farm

Story & Photos By Dan Davidson

On September 19 citizens of the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in met with other interested Dawsonites and representatives from Yukon College at Strachan's Farm, located opposite the airport on the North Klondike Highway, 15 km outside of Dawson City, to sign a Memorandum of Understanding.

The MOU is intended to pave the way for the creation of a teaching and working farm on this land, which is part of the First Nation's traditional territory and also part of its land selection under its Final Agreement.

In welcoming everyone to the signing ceremony TH Director of Human Resources Dexter MacRae noted that TH has a long history of land use in the area, including farming.

"When considering projects that would have the most far reaching positive effects for as many TH Citizens as possible, we proposed a TH Teaching and Working Farm.

Dexter MacRae was emcee for the event.

"(This) would provide many working opportunities in construction, produce care and growth, animal husbandry, overall farm maintenance, end product distribution and research control."

This would also be a boon to the food security and variety of the entire area, MacRae said.

An approach was made to Yukon College to undertake a partnership on this project and the college board's response was "immediate and decisive, clearly indicating that they were on board to assist TH in this endeavour."

Deputy Chief Jay Farr was on hand to welcome the initiative and thank those who had worked on developing the plan as well as those who came out to see the signing of the MOU.

Chief Eddie Taylor was unable to attend the event due to a death in his extended family, but sent good wishes in a press

"Using our settlement land for the production of food has long been an objective of the First Nation," he said. "A huge mähsi cho to everyone involved in making this dream a reality."

"This is kind of historic for us for a lot of reasons," said Dr. Karen Barnes, President of Yukon College. "I think this is the first agreement we've had with a First Nation ... on a specific project. That makes it really exciting, but the most exciting thing for all of us at the college is the potential (of the project).

"We have so many places that we can intersect with this: trade, biology and science, growing and all of the gardening things that we do, working on the land. There are so many elements of this that are related to education, so I think the College is a good partner. We're really looking forward to working with Dexter to see that we grow something next year."

MacRae noted that this was just the beginning of the project.

"We are starting from square one and it will take time, but the sky is the limit on where this farm can go."

Following the signing ceremony there was a lunch served on site, while the people served as a snack for the numerous bugs of various sizes that joined the gathering.

As stipulated in the MOU, the partners will next create a steering committee to develop long term priorities and planning for the project, and Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in hopes to be planting initial crops next year.

Looking for a Northern Perspective on the Airline Industry

By Dan Davidson

Some writers come to Berton House to gain inspiration. Some come strictly to write. Danielle Metcalfe-Chenail came to research, and that actually meant that Berton House was the base camp from which she ranged all over the territory, searching out archival material and interviews that would help her produce Polar Winds: A Century of Flying in the North.

Metcalfe-Chenail, who has since been selected for a two year stint as Edmonton's Historian Laureate, was here in the fall of 2010, and had intended, in her very focused way, to have this book ready for publication in 2013.

What finally slowed her down a little bit was becoming a new mother. Those little breaks at her son, Andre's, nap time when she thought she might get some work done on this book never seemed to be more than about 45 minutes, barely enough time to decide what to tackle next.

The idea for this project grew out of her first book, For the Love of Flying, which was the story of Laurentian Air Services and its subsidiaries, the company that one of her relatives flew for.

"There was a picture in that book of some Inuit kayakers and a Beaver float plane in the background that really captured my imagination in the first book," she said. "My dad had taken Inuit lessons in university and my mom would take business trips to the North, She would come back with these stories of landing on Baffin Island and these soapstone carvings.

"Some of those things just simmered below the surface and I came across this photo. Just driving through northern Ontario on that book tour in 2009, it all kind of came together. I thought this would be a great opportunity to combine my interest in aviation history (she's been the president of the Canadian Aviation Historical Society) with my passion for the North and my curiosity about indigenous people and contact relations.

"That's pretty much how it happened. It's amazing what happens in a car driving through Thunder Bay."

The project got delayed a bit because she was living in Wyoming at the time, without access to the sorts of material she would need to get started. She put out speculative applications to both the Canada Council for the Arts and the Berton House Writer in Residence program and, to her absolute delight and surprise, she got positive responses from both of them.

She returned to Canada, settling in Edmonton, and shortly after that arrived in Dawson City, full of ambition and on fire to further her research. It meant a lot of travel.

"As you saw," she said. "You drove me to the airport constantly while I was in Dawson. I got up to Inuvik and Old Crow, a couple of times each. I spent a lot of time in the library and the archives there in Dawson."

It was a cold enough early winter that she remembers shorting out the archival computer at the Dawson City Museum with the static charge she had built up on her snowsuit walking from Berton House to the museum.

Her Yukon time was mainly about gathering information rather than writing. As the three month residency came to an end she packed some of her research to travel, mailed the rest home, or had her archival requests sent to her there.

"I had all these presents waiting for me when I got home. Then it was a matter of going through everything over the next year or so.

"It was a challenging book in a lot of ways, and I had a lot of people saying, "Why are you going for a century? That's pretty long. How are you going to encompass all of that?'

"I wanted to go for a representative history rather than an exhaustive one and did kind of take that birds' eye view for the most part. I looked at some of the patterns and then zoomed in on some individual stories that I thought really spoke to that history.

"Everything I was reading that had been written was from a southern point of view and I really wanted to get at what northerners were feeling about what was happening in the air and on the ground.

"Hopefully it worked out. My hard copy just arrived yesterday and I'm still going through it. You always have second thoughts about projects when they're in the flesh."

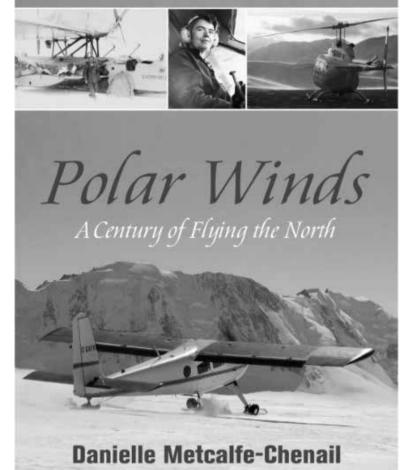

She's especially happy that the publisher managed to get 75 photos – some in colour – into the book, and that they are in the text where they relate best to the words.

Some of the anecdotal interview material didn't fit into the history but, starting with the story of John and Madeleine Gould's courtship, inspired her to approach What's Up Yukon with the idea for her regular Yukon Love column.

"I had to learn how to do short form journalism for that,"

She will be launching her book in Whitehorse on September 30 from 6 to 9 p.m. at a very appropriate location, the Yukon Transportation

Action Canada Fellows studied what makes Dawson work

Story & Photos By Dan Davidson

The Action Canada Northern Working Conference finished up its Yukon visit with a trip to Dawson City, arriving on September 18 after a day spent in Carcross, where they had taken in a presentation on the Tiny Homes Project and visited the Carcross Commons.

In Dawson they stayed at the Aurora Inn, which was the base for their daytime activities.

This national leadership program takes the magnates of tomorrow to various Canadian locales to discuss historical and current issues, hone leadership skills and ultimately present a public policy report. The Fellows, as the members are called, are chosen to spend five periods of time during their 10 month year meeting with leaders from across the nation and participating in leadership training activities.

The list of fellows for this year includes a wide range of ages and professional experience. This program is considered significant enough that many employers are willing to allow paid leave time for people to participate in it.

In Dawson most of Friday morning was taken up with a "thinking on your feet" public speaking exercise based on personal experience and current events. The early part of the afternoon was devoted to work on the task force reports the groups are preparing, while from 2 p.m. onward they were taken on several tours, including the Historical Walking Tour of Dawson City and a Field Trip to National Historic Site of Canada: Dredge #4.

The evening meal was a Dialogue and Dinner evening held in the ballroom at the Odd Fellows Hall. A cross section of local residents from a variety of backgrounds were invited to dine with the fellows and share their experiences of what it was like to live in rural Yukon. One of the fellows from each table was delegated to give a summary of the main points in the conversation at the close of the evening.

Action Canada's CEO, Cathy Beehan explained some of the goals of the program, which was founded just over 10 years ago to help identify and train future leaders for the nation. Much to her surprise, she is still with the program all these years later.

"Why should we not just hope for great leadership for the country, or wish for it, or assume we're going to get it, or criticize when we don't get it. Instead, why don't we help nurture it?

Beehan was in on the ground floor of developing a program aimed at identifying up and coming potential and helping to bring it along. The program is not necessarily aimed at young people, though most will be pre-middle age based on the 2014/15 list of Fellows. Higher education is not necessarily a prerequisite, but already being engaged in some kind of endeavor is essential.

Each of the guests and each of the Fellows was asked to introduce themselves to the entire group. The locals were asked to give some idea of their community involvement.

The lead local presenter for the evening was local artist, musician and former mayor John Steins, who spoke with some feeling of the journey that led him to come to Dawson and gave the history of some of the major local initiatives of which he has been a part, including the Dawson City Music Festival and the Dawson City Arts Society, the latter of which led to the salvation of the building in which they were having dinner and the eventual establishment of the Yukon School of Visual

The last speaker of the evening was Rick Nielsen son of the late Erik Nielsen and a Fellow of this group in 2006/07, who reflected briefly on connections among Yukon people, inspired by his discovery that both he and Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in CEO Jackie Olson have Danish ancestors.

On Saturday the group spent the morning in a session on Communication Strategies before heading for the airport and returning to Whitehorse.

T Fox Final Count from RSS is Impressive

The final count for the school's Terry Fox Run/Walk was an impressive $5742.25. This is considerably above the amount reported as having been raised in the City of Whitehorse event.

SUN GUIDE

The A to B Rollerski crew rolled through Dawson in September

Story & Photos By Dan Davidson

In the middle of September I find myself sitting on my front porch with Raymond Dombrovskis, a dual Latvian/ American citizen who has just completed a solo river trip from Minto Landing to Dawson before joining his Latvian compatriots in Dawson.

From here they will go to Inuvik and begin filming a recreation of Dombrovskis' 1988 roller ski odyssey from there to Baja.

Today, Dombrovskis is a successful businessman specializing in sports gear sales; he favours winter sports. It's a seasonal business he tells me, one that allows him to indulge a penchant for adventure travel in the offseasons. The Yukon River trip is one he has done before. He's travelled in the Peel Watershed and has been to the territory a number of times since 1988.

He remains connected to his favorite sport and was in Sochi during the recent Winter Olympics, acting as an advisor to the American Biathlon team.

Then, however, he was a young man who had emigrated to the USA at age 17 and had risen through his chosen sport to become a seven time US biathlon champion. He was sidelined from the Calgary Olympics as a result of an appendectomy.

Finding himself with time on his hands, he strapped on the wheeled training skis he used in the summer months to keep in shape, headed for the top end of the Dempster Highway and set out, accompanied by a friend in a camper van, to ski 4,200 miles to Baja. Mexico in just 90 days.

He says he doesn't really know why; he just had to do something. People they met would ask him, "Why are you doing this?"

As time went by, Dombrovskis would reply, "When I started I had no reason of doing it, but now I have a hundred to continue."

He had enough funding to start the trip, but they depended on sales of their "A to B, rollerski" T-shirts to get gas for the camper, and on the generosity of friends who wired money to post offices en route.

Along the way a photographer named Martins Grants took lots of pictures and shot about 20 hours of film, not really having any idea what they would ever do with it.

Back in Latvia, 15 years later, Dombrovskis gave his archival material to a boyhood friend, Arnis Aspers who, becoming quite obsessed with this story, decided that this was a trek that had to be immortalized in a documentary. Aspers has devoted himself to telling this story and has organized a "kickstarter" campaign to finance it.

My part in all of this is to sit as an interviewer for both men and talk to them about their quest. They've been directed my way by John Steins, whose Latvian roots seem to be showing more and more as he gets on in years. They call him Janis, and lately he's on Facebook as John Jānis Steins. Steins thinks this is an interesting story, and I agree to spend an hour or so with these guys, not realizing at the time that my interview with them might end up as part of the film. I would have shaved.

They are travelling this time in a somewhat larger motorhome, a second hand Fleetwood model that they actually found it was cheaper and more convenient to buy and resell later than to rent. Its internal generator is a bit too loud in the background for my purposes or theirs, so I get them to plug into our house current while we chat. Jānis Spurdziws and Matiss Spaile busy themselves rearranging the furniture on the porch to get the best light for their cameras, while drone pilot Guido Puke hangs out in the RV, working on something for later. There will be aerial footage in the film.

They have digitized archival film footage from the original trip. Together we watch Dombrovskis working his way along the last bit of the Dempster Highway at the Junction and then on into Dawson. There are lots of standard shots of the streets and the Moosehide Slide, snippets of conversation with folks who are wondering what he is doing. At one point they pass by the Odd Fellows Hall, now the headquarters of KIAC, but then a derelict structure with no obvious reason to continue to exist. I tell them to go take a look the phoenix that has risen from the wreckage.

Dombrovskis himself is somewhat bemused by Aspers' dedication to telling his story from 25 years ago. He's pleased to be participating but says that he doesn't see it as being such a big deal after all this time.

"I've no idea," he says quickly. "He (nodding towards Aspers) says it's a great story and I will become famous."

Aspers chimes in, "It's not about the famous. I think the story is necessary to tell the people because it's very interesting."

Aspers and Dombrovskis beside their RV

Aspers poses while the film crew adjusts the lighting.

School of Visual Arts awards its first scholarships

The Yukon School of Visual Arts awarded its first two scholarships in a small ceremony in the school's Confluence Gallery on September 19 at 10:30 a.m.

YSOVA Program Director Dr. Curtis Collins explained that the college now offers two scholarships each year, one to a deserving applicant from the Yukon and a second to a deserving applicant from Canada or the United States.

"It's basically for us to encourage students to apply from within the Yukon and now we're recruiting into the United States and the rest of Canada too," he said.

These awards acknowledge excellence in the area of visual arts and are intended to attract the most accomplished high school students from throughout the Yukon and across North America to SOVA's foundation year program.

Successful completion of the foundation year in Dawson guarantees students a seat for their second year at one of the following arts colleges: Emily Carr University, Vancouver, B.C.; Alberta College of Art and Design, Calgary, Alberta; OCAD University, Toronto, Ontario; The Nova Scotia College of Art and Design, Halifax, N.S.; University of the Fraser Valley, Abbotsford, B.C.

Yukon College President, Dr. Karen Barnes was on hand to assist in the presentations to Haylie Griffis-King of Whitehorse and Isabel Bergwin from Etobicoke, Ontario.

"I just want to say," Barnes added, "that (Yukon College) matches this, so you get to double your money. This is really a thrill for me, because I was on the original governing council and I remember when we talked about these scholarships, so I'm really thrilled that I get to be here to give them to you."

The YSOVA portion of each scholarship is $1,000.

The Fire Reapers
By Patricia Robertson
Linnaea Press
439 pages
$16.95

Patricia Robertson's first novel for young adult readers is of that type known as the "timeslip novel". This involves a person from one time frame - usually the present, as in Diana J. Gabaldon's Outlander series – being displaced in time. This can be either backwards or forwards. A variation of this plot device is currently being used in the TV series Continuum, in which characters from several different possible futures have been dropped into something like our present.

When this works well, as it does in Robertson's novel, it provides us with a "stranger in a strange land" character who has to discover all the ins and outs of his or her new circumstances. We learn them along with him, which saves us from being subjected to a large number of "information dumps" along the way.

Twelve-year old Neil has only recently relocated from Vancouver to Whitehorse. That's a lot to get used to right there. Suddenly he's living in a house that's more like a long cabin, tucked into the bluff on one side of the city. While exploring he meets an old timer who tells him what sounds like a crazy story about a guy named Tombstone Charlie, in whose house he is now living. Charlie disappeared one day three years ago after spending a lot of time on his private quest to find a "door into the future," which he believed would be a better place.

Neil thinks the whole idea is nutty, until he wakes up in the middle of the night, finds his dog barking at what seems to be a flame lined hole in the air, stumbles through it, and finds himself somewhere and somewhen else.

Neil and Freya have been transported centuries into the future, where climate change is no longer open to debate and most of the Yukon and NWT have become a desert. After last summer's fires in the NWT, that seems less of a leap than it might have when Robertson was writing this book.

The future isn't always a better place. In this one an insane religion has developed whose followers worship fire, believe trees are evil, and have set out to eliminate them from the planet. Their actions are intended to bring about a Last Stand in which the world will be destroyed by fire and then, somehow, reborn.

This world is an odd mix of retro-village life and high-tech cities, the latter controlled by the devotees of the Fire Reapers. There are all sorts of hybrid creatures in this world. Some of them have been around since time immemorial, hiding from humankind. Others are the result of genetic breeding experiments by earlier human civilizations. Possibly the strangest of all is a talking rock, a stone with a decidedly dim view of the humans it has been tasked to assist.

Early on, Neil is captured by Fire Reapers, but he and his dog escape and are rescued by rural villagers living in quiet resistance to the dominant faith. He becomes friends with Astra, a girl about his age whose father has also been experimenting with remote viewing of other times through the use of a device called a Memory Stone.

When the village is attacked by the Fire Reapers, the two young people and the dog escape, and they begin a quest that takes them from group to group of strange beings. Every one they meet is somehow certain that they are special youngsters who are the key to overcoming the reign of the Fire Reapers and stopping the destruction of the world at their hands

The kids aren't so sure about all this, but they make an effort to try and save some of their friends, and Astra's father, who have been captured and taken to the cult's city and fortress.

As is typical of this genre, there are many attempts and failures, much hardship, meetings with strange beings and some large scale fighting. As this narrative mostly sticks close to Neil's point of view, with smaller sections from Astra and some from Charlie (yes, they do find him), most, though not all, of the fighting is reported at second hand.

In a tradition going back to Lewis Carroll's Wonderland and L. Frank Baum's Oz, there is a resolution after the climax and Neil returns to his everyday life without anyone being aware of his adventure.

YuKonstruct officially opens: 3D printers, laser cutter and more!

WHITEHORSE -

YuKonstruct, Yukon's Makerspace, is officially opening its doors to the public Tuesday, September 16th. All welcome to the Grand Ribbon Cutting Ceremony at 135 Industrial Road between 6 and 9. Free food and drinks for purchase available. Attendees will be able to participate in the mystery community art project and witness a ribbon cutting like no other. Trust us.

In advance of Tuesday's Ceremony, YuKonstruct is screening the documentary 'Maker' at the Old Fire Hall Friday September 12th at 7 pm. Come learn about and be inspired by the global maker-movement!

In January, over 200 Yukoners told us they wanted a makerspace. In March, the new YuKonstruct Makerspace Society was formed. By May a space was secured. Since then, this community-driven not-for profit organization has been working to outfit the space and realise the dream. YuKonstruct has already hosted various community events including Hacking Health North, a Balloon Launch to Space, and an Instructables LED Build Night.

Tuesday's event marks the point at which YuKonstruct will be officially open to the public: for inventors, entrepreneurs, hobbyists, tinkerers, and those generally curious and creative!

"I joined YuKonstruct because I am an interdisciplinary kind of person," says Amelia Merhar. "I love to learn new mediums, skills and techniques to make projects. A community space with access to cool, fancy tools will be a welcome resource and inspiration for my art."

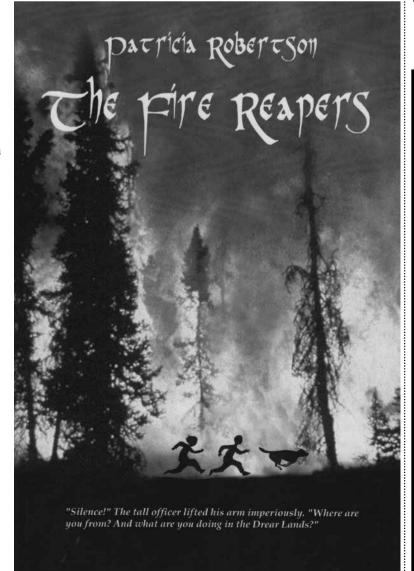

YuKonstruct will offer various classes, courses and workshops. Both facilities have the spaces and tools for woodworking, metal-working, industrial sewing, 3D printing, computers, electronics, and a wide array of smaller tools.

YuKonstruct is joining the global maker-movement that brings together a cool space, cool tools, and a (cool) creative community. With this combination, anything is possible!
