Fracking in the Klondike? No way, citizens say.

Story & Photos
By Dan Davidson

If there was any doubt about how hydraulic fracking is viewed in the Klondike, the results of the visit of the Select Committee Regarding the Risks and Benefits of Hydraulic Fracturing to Dawson should settle the matter.

Despite the awkward timing of the meeting, held between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m., about 50 people turned out to talk with the committee about their concerns and 28 spoke on the record, turning thumbs down on the idea of fracking anywhere in the Yukon.

Long time Yukoner Julie Frisch compared the very notion of fracking as it is currently practiced as being a scheme worthy of a Monty Python skit.

She said no one really knows what's going on under the ground with the water table or how the processes, which are much more intensive now than they were when the technology was first developed, affect the subsurface strata.

Like a number of others, she suggested that undertaking such actions without more knowledge was foolhardy.

Jim Taggart spoke to the toxicity of the fluids used in fracking and, along with several others, spoke of how the process actually removes fresh water from the ecosystem by contaminating it.

Kath Selkirk urged the committee to "think of the people before the corporations."

Sebastian Jones echoed the previous concerns and raised the question of the demographic explosion that would occur in the territory if, in fact, fracking were to produce a large scale industry here. The nature of fracking is such, he said, that it necessarily takes up a lot of space and needs a lot of workers. The Northern Cross experience suggests that no more than 25% of those would be Yukoners.

Importing the work force necessary to run a large operation would, he said, "up end Yukon society, it would affect our demography violently."

The territory has seen rapid demographic shifts in the past – during both the Gold Rush and the building of the Alaska Highway – and history shows such influxes to have been disruptive to those already living here.

Terrance Shädda called hydraulic fracturing "an attack on water" and therefore an attack on nature in general, including plants, animals and people.

Some people simply went to the microphone at the table to say that they agreed with others and opposed fracking. Some others, like town councillor and Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Director of Natural Resources Darren Taylor, sat down long enough to say that the five minutes allotted for presentations was not nearly long enough for him to air his issues and he would make a written submission.

Town councillor Bill Kendrick, also with TH as Land and Resources Manager, spoke of the precautionary principle in developing public policy, but went on to list the extensive number of American states, foreign nations and even a few Canadian provinces that have imposed restrictions on or banned the practice of fracking.

"If the process isn't in place to do it safely," he said, "there's value to leaving these resources in the ground."

Rounding out the list of Dawson politicians, Mayor Wayne Potoroka spoke of water as being one of the things municipalities are responsible for. It must, he said, be protected.

"We need to have some assurances that our water will be drinkable."

Both Joanne Bell and her daughter, Elizabeth Engel, appealed to the need to protect special areas of the world from being damaged by unnecessary industrial intrusions.

Harm to the environment was a constant theme in many of the presentations. Included in a number of comments was the idea that it seemed incongruous for the Minister of Economic Development, Currie Dixon, to also be the Minister of the Environment.

TH Deputy Chief Jay Farr was much less forgiving about any chance that the government would decide to allow the practice.

"If you don't ban fracking you will have another court case on your hands. Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in has a resolution in place to ban fracking from our traditional territory and we're going to stick to it and we're not going to be budging. We're fighting left and right, right down to the nitty gritty."

Chief Eddie Taylor was no

TH Deputy Chief Jay Farr and Chief Eddie Taylor

The committee: Jim Tredger, Darius Elias, Lois Moorcroft, Patti McLeod, Allison Lloyd (clerk), Currie Dixon, Sandy Silver less adamant in his opposition to fracking, saying that he was speaking on behalf of 1000 TH citizens in the territory.

"It will lead to litigation," he insisted, making reference to the First Nation's participation in a court case related to the Peel Watershed. "Clearly in my mind there's going to be a ton of litigation if you guys go there. It's an unhealthy situation. You're playing with our water. I think all of you sitting there know better. I hope you make the right decision and the right recommendation."

While Northern Cross has indicated that fracking will not be part of its Eagle Plains operation, Taylor warned that any move in that direction would probably hasten the demise of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) and damage the calving grounds of the Porcupine Caribou herd.

There were a couple of breaks during the three hour session, and some people got to speak more than once after the initial list of speakers had been completed. What was plain throughout were the consistent themes of concerns about water quality, concerns about human and animal impacts, and a complete rejection of any thought there might be of fracking, either in the Klondike or elsewhere in the territory.

Uffish Thoughts: What's the weather like today?

Story & Photo
By Dan Davidson

That the Yukon River isn't higher than it is after several weeks of rain and drizzle is a sure indicator of how little snowfall there was during the months after the New Year. Up to Christmas the City of Dawson was looking with some apprehension at its rapidly shrinking budget for street clearing. After that, it didn't really seem to be much of a problem.

Breakup, at least in the front of the town, was described to me as being quite anti-climatic, largely because there wasn't a lot of water.

Compared to last year at this time levels are very low, and this is in spite of many days of drizzle and a number when the rainfall was positively torrential.

I begin this column with such a mundane title and topic as an illustration of what folks often talk about when they greet each other. Whether it's in person or in the various types of social media, it's not unusual for the weather to be part of the conversation.

For those of us with families in other parts of the country, checking on how they are doing includes finding out what kind of weather they are having. I'll bet that those of you with weather aps on your various handheld devices have bookmarked some of the place where your relatives and good friends live and maybe the town where you grew up.

There's been much foofaraw about the fate of the CBC lately.

As a devotee of Radio One and Two and of the public affairs broadcasting on CBC-North and CBC News Network, I'll begin this portion of the column by saying that I don't remember "killing the public broadcaster" being a part of anyone's election platform, and I am not happy with the reports coming out of this week's announcements from the government appointed hatchet man who is currently running the organization.

But that's not what I sat down to write about this week. I'll get there, but it's a bigger topic for another time.

This week it actually is about the weather – or rather, the lack of the weather.

Some months back now, in February, Claire Martin retired from the CBC and suddenly the little five minute nation wide weather recap at the end of the National disappeared, replaced by those little "here's something we're working on" teasers.

That certainly didn't happen because Claire Martin was the only person capable of filling that slot in the program. As good at it as she was, there were lots of times when she wasn't around and other people did the job. So, as much as I enjoyed the banter between Martin and Mansbridge, or Martin and any of the other anchor people, it's not the person I'm missing so much as the information.

Let's face it, there's a good deal of the year when our part of the Yukon is dark and cold, and for the last several years it's been gratifying to watch the late night weather before heading off to bed and finding out that there are things worse than being dark and cold. There are blizzards, and ice storms, and massive, long-lasting power outages, and all manner of unpredictable, nasty weather.

We may be dark and cold in the middle of the winter, but we're predictable, for the most part. We can dress for it, seal up the house, turn on some lights, sit down, turn on the television late at night and watch some part of the country being hammered by whatever surprise package the planet has in store for them this week.

In fact this, summer, just last week, we saw tornados, floods and a "post tropical storm" (Hey you! Almost a hurricane!) wreaking havoc from Saskatchewan to Cape Breton.

At the same time that we are feeling grateful that we aren't there, having to deal with that, we can sympathize with our fellow Canadians and feel connected to them in some way. We may tap out a little personal message to friends and family, asking if they're okay – because we just saw what a mess they are having to deal with.

So the missing weather report is not just because Claire Martin has run off to work for an outfit that makes reality television shows (Claire? What were you thinking?). CBC still has Nick Czernkovich and Johanna Wagstaffe and several others who have the educational qualifications and the on-air presence to do the job.

Bring back the weather recap, CBC. It helps make us feel like a country

Rain has been a regular later afternoon or evening feature of many days this June. This sky doesn't look like it should be wet but it was, at 12:18 one morning.

LETTERS

A Special Thank-You To Dawson City

On July 7,2014 my sweet daughter Lisa Mckenna will be gone one year. I miss our daily talks,her many wonderful notes and letters, her beautiful spirit. She was and is my sweet baby girl, always. I have been in many small towns during my long life,but never one as special as Dawson City, Lisa always said once I came for a visit I would not want to leave, she was right, if not for my family here,I would move north. Everyone I met a year ago, Klondike Sun staff , her landlord,Friends,shop people, people on the street, The R.C.M.P, the Bank and many more, to many to name, could not have been kinder to me. They gave me so much love and help. Dawson City's people are rare. I've been no other place where everyone looks inside a person , no matter what their standing in the community is,and judges them for what they are inside and not their circumstances. Thank You Dawson City for all your kindness to my Lisa and myself.

With Love , Respect and gratitude,

Fawn (Lisa's Mom)

Dawson residents ignored and disregarded

Like many Dawson residents I have been involved in trying to resolve the issues of mining in municipalities, addressing the conflicts between the Municipal and Mining Acts and seeking a resolution to the Slinky Mine issues in the community. These matters have really come to the fore since the Yukon Government announced its decision to relocate sections of the Dome Road and Mary McLeod at taxpayers' expense ($1.3M) to allow Darrell Carey, the owner of the Slinky claims to mine under the existing highways.

Residents have put in an enormous amount of work over the past five years trying to assist governments and the community to identify long-term solutions to the problems we face. In the past couple of weeks I have received an email from EMR stating that it has "no comment" and "won't take a position" on questions I raised in relation to the Slinky Mine. A couple of days later YESAB emailed to say "it is unlikely the Executive Committee will respond" to an enquiry about the need for a YESAB assessment for the project. To date, YTG Community Services has failed to address any of the concerns or solutions we've raised nor even provided a single piece of advice. Now we discover that department will not take up residents' numerous offers to meet. Residents are being stonewalled and ignored.

If this wasn't bad enough, we

Wither The Webcam?

We spent a week in your wonderful city in August of 2013 and enjoyed every minute. On our return to southern Ontario we stayed in touch by checking in daily to keep in touch through the Front St. webcam sponsored by Mac's Fireweed Books. Unfortunately the camera has not been operating since early May of this year. We keep checking in but nothing has changed. I tried to contact Mac's via the link on the webcam page but it takes me nowhere. Is there any move afoot to re-start the camera ? We sure miss it as I am sure many of your tourists do. All our best to your city.

Is the Dome Road relocation about safety, residential lots or mining?

By Dan Davidson

The Public Meeting and Open House on the Dome Road Relocation and Future Lots was exactly that, and it did not meet with the approval of the most vociferous members of the two dozen citizens who arrived to attend the meeting at the Downtown Hotel.

They had paraded a bit outside with signs expressing their displeasure over the deal that has been reached to relocate the Dome Road and allow Slinky Mines to search for gold under the old road bed.

Inside they were even more upset to learn that the deal had been inked and signed back on May 14, 2014 and that negotiations had been quietly going on among the three parties to the agreement for about 18 months.

A one and a half page handout summarized the negotiated settlement that will see the Yukon government assume the cost and responsibility for relocating the Dome Road to improve it, over a one kilometre stretch that happens to coincide with the boundaries of the bench which contains the claims that are owned by the Slinky Mine's Carey family.

Energy Mines and Resources Manager Bryony McIntyre summarized the government's position, saying that this agreement was first and foremost about closing out the claims on that bench off to the west of the Dome Road so that the area could be developed for country residential lots.

Carey had a right to mine claims that he had owned prior to the town's boundary expansion in the 1990s, she said, but both the town and the territory had identified that bench as being a prime candidate for lot development. McIntyre's position was that the government was assisting both the town and the miner by undertaking the $1.3 million project to realign the road at this time.

The government plans to have the road realignment completed by late in the fall season this year. While this will improve the safety of the road by rounding out a very sharp curve just below the Slinky bench, McIntyre said the safety issues were secondary to freeing up the bench for lot development.

Once the new Dome Road section is completed, Darrell Carey will be free to push his mining activity under and through the old road, and will be given until the end of December 2017 to finish all his mining in that particular area, then abandoning the claims.

Where this gets tricky is that

These folks really wanted to talk about the Slinky Mine, but most left when it became clear to them that this was not the topic on the table.

Carey will still retain rights to fractions of claims on the east side of the new road, and a number of people in the audience wanted to know why that kind of sloppy detail hadn't been ironed out during the bargaining.

Mayor Wayne Potoroka, along with councillors Bill Kendrick and Stephen Johnson, were united in saying that they felt they had managed to get the best deal they could for the town, which has been dealing with this issue for most of the current century. They did indicate that they weren't especially satisfied with some of the outcomes – would have preferred to extinguish more of the Carrey claims; were not happy that the miner was to be allowed to get free of the penalties that had been assigned him by the Yukon courts after he broke a number of city bylaws over the last several years, going back through two council terms.

Early in the meeting protesters, who had hoped that this would be more than an information session, got up and left when it became clear that nothing in the signed deal was up for alteration. Jim Taggart put it that there was no point in being there if this was not a consultation, and departed with several people.

While others were not as strident, there were still plenty of concerns expressed at the meeting.

MLA Sandy Silver wanted to know how the $1.3 million figure had been arrived at, but the answer that it was a political decision handed down to the departments to actualize didn't tell him any more than he had been able to learn in Legislative debates.

Glenda Bolt, whose property is adjacent to the existing mining claims, above them on the Mary McLeod Road, said that this was a Band-Aid solution which would not really create the end point that both the City and the territory were saying it would. Until this was dealt with as a broader issue, she said, it was going to keep coming back.

Bill Holmes was particularly dissatisfied that the solution at hand encompassed only a small portion of the problem that exists because of mining claims being grandfathered within the town's boundaries. While he understood that the $1.3 million was going to benefit the town's future development, and was not simply a Slinky Mine subsidy, he felt that Carey could surely have been persuaded to give a bit more for the deal he was getting, had the government been willing to push harder.

Councillor Johnson felt that this was not a 100% solution; but that it was in the 80 to 90% range given the constraints the town had faced in dealing with the other two parties.

Miner Mark Favron was in favour of the agreement in that it would get Carey into mining out his claim and get him out of the area as quickly as possible.

Other topics which may need more clarification according to the discussion are the provision of pedestrian pathways along that section of the road, and the pros and cons of realigning the junction of the Dome and Mary McLeod Roads. Both subjects were batted around but it seems that further discussions will be held at the administrative level.

A happy crowd celebrates Canada Day

By Dan Davidson

Canada Day in Dawson was a little slow getting started. Most of the rain came during the night, and folks were able to walk to the Pancake Breakfast put on by St. Paul's Church (using the facilities at St. Mary's) on a pretty fine morning by 8 a.m., but the rain started to drizzle down just about 3 hours later and that held up the start of the parade for just a bit.

The Canada Day parade is lower key than the Discovery Days event in August, but there was still lots of enthusiasm, with a full contingent of the RCMP in Red Serge, a horde of decorated bicycles, half-ton floats filled with musicians and Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in citizens showing off their culture.

Gertie and her Girls were there, riding in the Fire Department's most antique running vehicle. Parks Canada celebrated the Nugget's Stanley Cup Challenge and the Museum guides were out in their period costumes.

The major addition this year was a decorated Holland-America touring coach and, of course EMS and the Fire Dept. finished off the show. Over at Victory Gardens Diamond Tooth Gertie led in the National Anthem, flanked by the Mounties and later joined by a contingent of Scouts for a photo.

In front of the Museum host Laura Mann invited everyone to stay for a picnic lunch of smokies, watermelon, drinks and cake, but before that came the speeches.

MLA Sandy Silver welcomed everyone to Canada's 147th Birthday Party.

"This town's history," he said, "is such an integral part of Canadian history. Dawsonites are so lucky that we spend every day here in the Klondike, a place where many of you come for the trip of a lifetime. We get to call this place home."

Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Deputy Chief Jay Farr welcomed everyone to the First Nation's traditional territory.

"The Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in have a long history of welcoming newcomers to our territory," he said. "This value of acceptance is something we are proud to see in all citizens of our country. We should be proud of our culture and diversity. That's what makes this day special."

"Canada Day in Dawson City is always special," said Mayor Wayne Potoroka. "So many significant events took place right here that influenced our community, shaped our country and changed the world."

"I'm a proud Canadian, and it's an honour to say I live in a town that has played, and still plays, a large role in our nation's tale. The Gold Rush reconfigured the economies of the western world and still ignites the imagination of people worldwide. The Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in continue redefining First Nations self-government for our town, our territory, and our world and building on a resilient culture that has flourished in this place for thousands and thousands of years."

"If you're a fresh Canadian, and I know there are a few here with us, then this is your first Canada Day as a citizen of our country. You're likely feeling a great deal of pride right now. But understand that feeling only gets stronger with each Canada Day celebration. I've often said Canadians are born all over the world, they just have to find their way through to join the rest of us. The immigrant experience is such a large part of Canada's story. Thanks for adding to it, and welcome."

While folks lined up for the lunch Museum staff set up the kids' game in the park and as the afternoon wore on many people made their way to Front Street for the Yukon Goldpanning Championships and, later that evening, to the Palace Grand, for Brandon Isaac's concert as part of the Live at the Palace Grand season.

There was some rain as the day went on, but not enough to dampen spirits and by evening it was fine again.

Miller Recaptures Goldpanning Championship

Story & Photos
By Dan Davidson

David Miller regained his title in the Yukon Open and Klondike Open events at the Yukon Gold Panning Championships on Canada Day in Dawson.

In the championship event Miller found all 8 flakes of gold in a time of 3 :26 seconds. This entitled him to the trophy and a $2000 prize to help him attend the World Gold Panning Championships in Sweden later this summer.

Lorraine Miller came second in this event, with a time of 5 :16. Last year's winner, Paul Robitaille, finished faster, but missed a flake and so incurred a penalty for a third place finish. There were six contestants.

The Miller family swept the Klondike Open event. David came first by finding all 6 flakes. Brother Dirk missed one for a second place finish and son Justin missed two to finish third. There were eight panners in the contest.

In the Seniors' event, Diane Schroeder found 11 of the 12 flakes for a finishing time (with a three minute penalty) of 7:13. James Archibald located 10 flakes in his bucket of dirt for a time of 11:15 and Art Sailer found nine flakes for a time of 15:52. There were seven contestants.

The Cheechako Open is for visitors and beginners and saw a healthy field of 23 competitors searching for six gold flakes. The winners were Kate Laugesen, Harold Kuntz and Charles-Phillippe Labbe.

The Youth 12-15 category had just two entrants. Bleyd Hammond won the event, followed by Jesse Favron.

The Youth Under 11 category had eight panners. Kelvin (no last name given) won the event, finding all five flakes. Hadley Paige Tulloch came second with four. Clement Potoroka took a bit longer but did find all five flakes. Our mayor already has his photo up on Facebook.

This year there was no Corporate Challenge event and the on and off drizzle meant that the planned Gold Pour could not be carried out. In spite of the occasional light rain, a healthy crowd remained for the better part of the three and half hour event.

Chinook salmon fishing closure in full effect

Story and Photos
by Hannah Eden

The Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in (TH) Citizens Council has announced a full Chinook salmon harvest closure in light of the crisis gripping the Yukon and Alaska.

TH Citizen's Council made the decision following a meeting held on Thursday June 19th after visit from the Yukon Salmon Sub-Committee.

"We did recommended a precautionary closure to Department of Fisheries and Oceans as part of our mandate," said Dennis Zimmermann, Executive Director for Yukon Salmon Sub-Committee during a teleconference on June 24th.

Legislation was passed with full closure of Chinook salmon harvesting until the escapement numbers have been met.

Roberta Joseph, Manager of Fish and Wildlife for Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in, announced the closure during a teleconference held on June 24th with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game and members of First Nation communities along the Yukon River.

"We've been having community meetings and we're in the process of doing a mail out to our citizens," said Joseph.

Although the crisis has meant numbers of Chinook salmon have been at a record low, a positive follow-up was given at the teleconference by Alaska Department of Fish and Game

"The total drainage projection is approximately for 121,000 Chinook salmon. So this would put us at the upper end of our pre-season outlook of 64,000 to 121,000," said a correspondent for ADFG.

"I think it's safe to say, we are seeing a better run than we expected. However, a run of 121,000 is still, unfortunately, lower than average."

Alaska Department of Fish and Game voiced that they needed to see Chinook salmon arriving at the sonar project in Eagle, before they can have any confidence in whether escapement goals will be met.

With this in mind, Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Citizens Council is still going ahead with a full closure.

"Our Council had passed a resolution for no harvesting of Chinook salmon," says Joseph. "There will be a Chinook salmon closure in Tr'ondëk traditional territory for subsistence harvesting. So we won't be fishing for first fish."

With a closure now in full effect, communities now have to adjust to the lack of Chinook salmon harvesting in all areas of life.

Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in First Fish Youth Camp will be affected as there will be no fishing for first fish. Fish will be taken from last years harvest to be used in the camp.

"It's now an accredited program for our kids to learn," says Angie Joseph-Rear, a Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in elder.

"We've been asking people if they have any left over fish that they are willing to give up. We have to have at least 20 fish. We still need fish to teach our kids and to tell them how important it is to share. If a person doesn't have fish, then you always give. And that's what we're doing."

Fishing is of huge importance to many families in the community, however most are taking the news in stride.

"In the last ten years, we've known the salmon has been in decline," says Ryan Peterson, Fish and Wildlife Steward.

"It feels wrong for me to fish. When I catch a female salmon and I cut the eggs out of her... It's not something I like doing."

Preservation is key to this crisis – to protect the salmon for future generations is the ultimate goal.

"I don't plan on fishing this year. Even if I have the Aboriginal rights to fish, I choose not to this year for preservation," says Joseph-Rear.

Members of the community such as Peterson have been making house calls to convince others of the importance of preservation.

"I'm going to do door to door and talk to people and say, Listen, you've got a 10 year old boy there. Do you want him to fish in 8 years from now? So stop fishing for 8 years," says Peterson.

"Give him that opportunity to go out when he's 18. You can still teach him – he'll still know how."

Despite the lack of Chinook salmon harvesting, traditions will not falter for Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in.

Peggy Kormendy, Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in elder, has been fishing with her family for most of her life - her family being one of the strongest fishing families in Dawson City.

"I got married and then my husband taught my children how to do the fish wheel and how to do this and that on the river," shares Kormendy. "They were brought up with that. They know now how to do fishing."

Chinook salmon is a huge part of culture and teaching; however, the art of fishing is a culture which Kormendy believes will not be swept away with the new changes.

"If you like that kind of life, you have to have it in your heart to go out in the rain or whatever. You put your gear on, you go out and you check your net."

Stories of survival, endurance and friendship from Yukon River Quest

Ken Gibbons sits with his wife Kim after finishing 5th in the Men’s Solo Kayak class. Gibbons was also honoured with the Spirit of the North award after helping two stranded competitors who capsized on the river.

Yukon River Quest competitors have once again passed through the waters of the Yukon River from the banks of Whitehorse to the shore of Dawson City.

Every year hundreds of racers from around the world, travel to Whitehorse, Yukon to take part in one of the hardest races in the world. Traveling by canoe or kayak, men and women take up their paddles and venture out on a 700 km quest. Strength, endurance and health are tested every waking hour. However, this year, racers were faced with a little more than they bargained for.

With torrential rains and high winds over Lake Laberge, various team members encountered waves of a terrifying five or six feet in height.

“It started out good,” said Leigh Merritt, a competitor from High River, Alberta who raced with his wife Cheryl.

“We got out good, but that storm on the lake, that was the end of our race. I ended up tearing my shoulder out.”

Fifty kilometers in length, Lake Laberge is one of the most dreaded stretches of the race. With freezing waters and unpredictable weather being commonplace, this year’s rain and wind made the seemingly short leg almost unbearable.

“I was at the front taking strokes and there was nothing. There was just air because you’re just in swells. We ended up getting turned sideways. It was really quite a struggle for us to get to shore – it took all we had to stay upright, leaning into the waves so we wouldn’t flip and me leaning on the side trying to steer. At one point I said to Leigh, ‘I think we’re going to drown.’”

Drowning and rough waters aren’t the only fears - the biggest is that of the silent, but deadly, hypothermia.

This year’s race saw a near emergency as two young women capsized their canoe after leaving Laberge and arriving back on the Yukon River.

However, endurance and sportsmanship were honored at the awards ceremony after the race, as Whitehorse competitor Ken Gibbons sacrificed his time and equipment to help the stranded girls.

“I left the checkpoint at the end of Laberge and went down onto the river. It was about 6 a.m. when I turned the corner of the river, I saw on the far shore a white canoe turned upside down and two girls waving for help,” shares Gibbons.

“I paddled as hard as I could to get to shore and I got out and ran up to some higher ground and made a fire for them. I got them by the fire and grabbed them my dry clothes. They actually flipped at 5 a.m., so they were there an hour by the time I got there. Their lips were blue. They were experiencing hypothermia and were in shock. So I got some clothes on them.”

Despite the challenges of weather, sleep deprivation and hunger, friendship and fun are the cornerstones to this intense race.

Racers such as Philippe Heitz and Arthur Sucker traveled from Switzerland and France to compete together as well as sisters, Patty and Beth Clune from Toronto.

Friends Pat McKenna and Liz Bosely from Whitehorse have competed for four years together.

“And when we were signing up and filling out our online forms we thought, ‘Well, what kind of a team name shall we have,’ and when I was leaving Pat’s house I said ‘Well, there’s no turning back!’ And that became our team name.”

However, none of the fun and sportsmanship would be had without support teams and organizers, some of whom have been volunteering with Yukon River Quest for 14 years. Such is Al Foster’s story – a long term volunteer whom competitors look forward to seeing at the scheduled stop in Carmacks.

“It’s a big team that takes people all the way from the start to the end,” says Gary Seed, solo kayaker from Whitehorse.

“The racers are the benefactors, but if anything didn’t happen, if there wasn’t the vision there from the Board on how it was gonna play out, if there wasn’t the people to run the boats, if they didn’t have the campgrounds running or the food provided - any of those make the trip problematic, if not undoable.”

Dumpster dining: a guide to the world of recycled cuisine

by Damian Jakibchuk

Since arriving in Dawson City for the summer, I have encountered a number of interesting people, but those that have really struck a chord with me are the ones with the very specific skillset relating to finding the best trash. Not realizing that there was even such a thing as desirable garbage, I came to realize that when it came to the world of secondhand eating that was going on around me, I had my head buried way down in the sand. In time, the story became much bigger than I had expected. What I had believed to be one or two of society's hidden outcasts roaming the streets, was actually an open, kind, community of some of the most resourceful people this side of Canada. It was explained to me that classroom curriculums down south in America have even included articles written about this sort of thing. In fact, more and more people I encounter as the days pass here in the Yukon have tried their hand at rummaging through garbage. Just the other day, I watched a couple carrying home some groceries make a stop at a trash bin to see what else they could find for their meal.

When I got the idea to write this story, I wanted to spread the word about a culture that is widely overlooked back in my home of Toronto. I got in touch with a young man calling himself Bet, and met up with him to ask him some questions. As I arrive at Dawson's gazebo by the river, Bet points at the garbage bin 20 feet away and proudly flashes me a package of food he put together from the trash only minutes before I arrived. A snack. It's an array of half-eaten dumpstered sandwiches, with a side of curly fries. He has me weigh it in my hand to show me how heavy it is. "I always eat like a king," he says to me.

How long have you been diving for? Does anybody call it diving?

Bet: 4 years. Pretty much since I started travelling in the fall of 2010. I like to go with dumpsterin'.

What compels you to do it?

B: I guess, originally it was just kinda the thrill, the challenge. I learned when my friends were going out for a meal, to just go behind the shop and get my own meal, but it extends my budget as well. I also believe it's my part to reduce waste, kind of a one man recycling operation.

More people come in from off of Front Street, and Kimberly and Dan join in on the conversation.

Kimberly: It's more common in bigger cities. It doesn't work as well here, because people are really smart about their waste.

Do people ever think you're homeless?

B: All the time, and technically I guess I am. But I think there's a difference between not renting a property and living on the streets unwillingly—I'm homeless by choice. A house is there as a ball in chain in my mind. When you're paying rent, you don't want to leave that space because you want to get your money's worth. Me, I consider myself a traveler, not homeless—a subtle distinction, but an important one in my mind.

'You can find bread, baked goods, veggies, protein... I feel I'm pretty nourished and I've been doing it for years. It's the main way I eat' - Bet

As we continue, Bet digs in to a dumpstered sandwich.

What kind of things do you dumpster-dive for? Is it just food?

B: Mostly food, just cause I like to eat, but you can find a lot of stuff. Bike parts are a great thing to find. I found a classic POG set with the stadium official board. Once I found a giant paper mache jester head. But since I travel I don't want too many material possessions.

How do you find the best food/stuff? Are there tricks?

B: Yeah, you start understanding the throw-out cycle. Sometimes they throw things out at night like pizza and doughnut places, but sometimes they throw it out in the morning when they check the expiry dates. Other times it's a competition to get there before someone else does. Often garbage can be locked in garages or trash compactors. But yeah, generally, if they're selling it in the front of the store, they're throwing it out in the back.

K: You really have to dig around too.

B: If you lift the bag, it's the heavier ones that have food in them.

K: Oh. That's a good tip.

What if the locked stuff has the best treats in it?

B: There's actually something called "Dumpster Liberation." Essentially you get bolt cutters and cut the bolts, but you don't cut the lock and dumpster-dive in the same night. You cut the lock, and come back the next night. Sometimes you super glue the lock to get them to change it. It's about sabotaging their method of locking, but it is explicitly illegal. I would not recommend that. I've also learned that sometimes bear proof is also human proof.

Do you ever dumpster-dive in groups? Is there an advantage to that?

B: Yep, but too many adds heat to the scene. 2, 3 people is good. One person can hold the dumpster open. In 1/3 of the time, we could cover all of Dawson.

What's the best meal you've ever had from the trash?

B: I've had many meals. I've essentially had full pizzas. I've made soups. I've dumpstered 28oz steaks of prime rib angus beef and it was in winter, so it was still good and I could cook it up rare.

K: Finding a cake was pretty good. I ate cake for like 3 days afterwards!

Dan: I remember eating a mountain of cake and thinking that this is what it was like for kings like 500 years ago.

What would your dream dumpster meal be?

B: Generally I get cravings for pizza, but that's an easy one to find. The good thing about pizza is it tastes good the day after. I pretty much find all the food I can think of, so I don't need to dream.

How do you make sure you get all of your vitamins?

B: It's not a problem. You can find bread, baked goods, veggies, protein. The hardest things to find are butter, spices, the basic cooking staples. If you know people who work in kitchens, sometimes they take supplies home with them to help you out. I feel I'm pretty nourished and I've been doing it for years. It's the main way I eat.

K: Sometimes it helps for someone to show you the ropes.

B: I can fill up a backpack with $150 of food in like 10 minutes. The hard part is just eating it before it goes bad.

So what are the downsides? Have you ever gotten sick?

B: No, but I have friends who have gotten sick. Immunity does build up though. The average kitchen counter is dirtier than a garbage bag. A counter can be wiped and that 1% of bacteria that survives will quickly multiply, but garbage bags get changed every day. In the end, just trust the nose. We instinctually know if something's good to eat. The biggest problem is when really aggressive store owners get possessive over their foods, like "Hey, get away from that food."

K: It can be so enraging when you find a dumpster full of fresh food and it's covered in bleach.

B: True, there can be some disrespectful dumpster-divers who make a mess, but I like to make the space cleaner than before I was there. I always like to say, the best way to please the dumpster gods is to sacrifice real garbage to them, which essentially equates to throwing out trash in the area of the dumpster.

Do you ever buy groceries or eat out?

B: Oh yeah, it's nice to treat yourself every now and then. I like to go to all you can eat buffets. Sometimes if you aren't successful dumpsterin', you have to supplement. If I feel I am missing something in my diet, I go out and buy it. Or sometimes I busk for food.

Does dumpster food ever taste better than store-bought food?

B: Oh yeah, man, cause you earned it. I eat all the ways you can eat. Food I bought, food friends cook, I eat at bum feeds (soup kitchens), and dumpsterin'. Dumpsterin' in my mind tastes better because you had to roll up your sleeves and work for it. You have to use ingenuity. Even if it's a simpler meal than what you can buy, it's better every time if it's dumpstered. There's a lot less risk than shoplifting. Plus, the minute I walk into a store, all eyes are on me. People think, "Oh, there's a dirty guy in the store. What's he up to?"

K: I prefer dumpstering to stealing any day.

Do you ever have to compete with wildlife?

B: Yep, haha, one tip is before you dive in, give the dumpster a knock, and the rats and raccoons will jump out, cause the worst thing is jumping into a dumpster and finding yourself face to face with a raccoon.

What's the strangest thing you've ever found in the trash?

B: I've opened up a dumpster of carcasses behind a butcher shop. Oh! Another time I was approaching a dumpster and there was a human leg sticking out the side. I said, "Oh no, this is the time I find a dead body in a dumpster." I walked up to it, and realized it was a Hallowe'en prop, a plastic human leg. I think it's only a matter of time before I find a dead human though.

What do you say to people who frown upon your lifestyle?

B: I explain to them that it isn't unhealthy, and that there's so much waste, that I'm doing my job to reduce it. Sometimes people offer to buy me lunch, but I tell them "I do this as a lifestyle, so take this into consideration before you buy me the meal." Other times when people ask me about it, I just call it surplus food allocation or something like that, and they move on. Most people do it for the thrill, not because they need it. Now and then I give homeless people food, but 8 out of 10 times they will give it back when I tell them I've dumpstered it.

What message would you give to those curious about dumpsterin' culture?

B: If you're curious, just start looking through dumpsters. I'm self-taught. There's no dumpster-diving school. I started one way: every time I'd walk by a garbage, I'd peek in. I would begin to challenge myself to get the same food as my friends, but from the garbage. Now it's become a second nature. It's not guaranteed, but put in the leg work and you'll find something eventually. The only real risk of dumpster-diving is trespassing. As long as you don't do those things you're fine, but sometimes you do and it gives you the thrill of the hunt.

Now I get a view of the action, as I join Bet on one of his brief rounds, hitting up many of the trash bins on Front Street. Bet tells me that since there was a fairly long downpour today, there won't be as much fresh garbage. He relies heavily on there being foot-traffic around town, and even the shops without customers will have less prepared that needs to be tossed out. Soon he finds a white paper bag in one of the bins, but to our dismay it only contains dog excrement. It doesn't take long for him to score some real food, however: a few bites of potato and egg salad, and a large block of about 200 grams of cheddar cheese with only a bit of mold on the outside. He cuts it off and sticks the cheese in his backpack. Right outside of The General Store he finds most of a sausage roll in good shape, just a little damp from some sort of liquid he can't put his finger on, but enough to settle his stomach. But that's just one of the colourful surprises in the day of a Dawson City dumpster-diver.

Water for Nature, Water for People

Yukoners have told us how important water is—for the environment, for people and for the economy.

In response, we've developed the YUKON WATER STRATEGY AND ACTION PLAN. It's a plan with six priorities for maintaining the quality, quantity and health of Yukon water for both nature and people.

It provides a comprehensive approach for making decisions about water in Yukon. It's a big-picture plan and we'll be spending an additional $2.7 million over three years on projects to make it happen.

Government

To fix or not to fix seems to be the recreation question

By Dan Davidson

The Art and Margaret Fry Recreation Centre has been a bone of contention in Dawson City ever since the day it opened. Cost overruns on that and some other projects brought down the council of the day and left the town with a massive debt. This was eventually forgiven when it was admitted that the problems were not solely caused by the town, and the territorial government set aside $4 million for the remediation of issues in the building.

Some of this has gone into studies of the ground and of the building itself, and the latest engineer's report, from Stantec Architecture, concludes that, rumours to the contrary, most of the building is safe to use and could have a 40 year life span with relatively minor fixes to make it work more efficiently.

What can't be fixed, in the long term, is the curling rink at the south end of the building. This is where problems first began to appear over a decade ago now, and the settling is continuing. Eventually the sinking of the curling rink will have an impact on the arena connected to it, though it doesn't seem to have done so yet.

There is movement in the other parts of the building – the arena and the administration sections – but this is nominal shifting back and forth with the seasons, the type of movement experienced in most Dawson buildings.

The trust account administered by the joint Dawson/YTG oversight committee has approximately $3 million remaining in it. While the major focus of that account is remediation of existing problems, some of it, approximately $1 million, might be diverted to changes within the building – like completing the unfinished second floor and upgrading some of the utility systems – which would vastly improve its efficiency, usefulness and operating costs.

Stantec made two recommendations about the future of the building, but the one that is getting the most attention is the proposal to build a new curling rink on the north side of the existing building and tear down the old one after that is done, a solution that would enable curling, which is on the upswing here again, to continue where it is during the project.

The class 4 estimate of costs for the preferred option is between $12 and $14 million. If the town council were to commit to finding a way to carry out the project, it would make sense, said city manager Jeff Renaud, to commit some of the remaining trust money to renovations that would further this project. Otherwise, it would not make sense.

As Mayor Potoroka reminded the two dozen people in the council chambers, and anyone listening to the broadcast meeting, the town is currently involved in some fairly expensive projects – new wells and improvements to the water quality system – that would suggest it should move cautiously.

On the other hand, as Renaud suggested, the future of recreation in the town has been trapped in “paralysis by analysis” for quite some years now. This report, he said, confirms that the building has a predictable life span and that it is not dangerous.

There has been much talk of building a new facility over the years. Indeed the last territorial election contest here featured a sod turning ceremony with full territorial government support at a site across the Dome Road from the Crocus Bluff ballpark and soccer pitch. As Mayor Potoroka reminded the audience, there was never any actual money attached to that election promise. A plan to divert the trust fund completely to the funding of a new centre was shot down in flames soon after it was proposed.

There were a number of probing questions from the audience, many of whom were connected to either the town's Rec. Board or the curling club.

When does the curling rink movement begin to make the rink unsafe?

What is the nature of the subsurface in the area where a new curling rink might be built?

What will the more detailed estimates for a new curling rink look like?

The report estimates $7.6 million for that alone, with the other costs going to changes in the existing building, including the systems changes and the second floor finishing.

Responses were necessarily vague at this point, but council needs to make a decision before anything can be firmed up. Given what happened the last time the town undertook a major recreation project, it's enough to make anyone a little nervous.

Most of the major problems are under the curling rink, at the right, but the report recommends against trying to repair them there due to poor soil conditions.

It is recommended that a new curling rink be built at this end of the building.

WIDC Alumnae Win Top Awards at 12th Annual Female Eye Film Festival

Toronto, ON – June 22, 2014.

Women In the Director's Chair (WIDC) alumnae directors, Paula Kelly, Lulu Keating, Annie Bradley and Christine Buijs received top honours at the 12th Annual Female Eye Film Festival's closing ceremonies held at the prestigious Royal Cinema, 608 College Street, Toronto.

Paula Kelly took home the festival's top prize, Best Of Show, for her debut feature, Euphoria, a stirring road movie intersecting the lives of a young woman and her mother who abducted her a decade earlier. Lulu Keating, who is also the 2010 WIDC Feature Film Award-winner for her musical comedy, coming-of-age film, Lucille's Ball, won Best Canadian Feature. Writer/filmmaker, Annie Bradley with her writing partner, Daniela Saioni were awarded Best Reserve Screenplay from the Festival's Script Development Program for The WBI, and Christine Buijs won the Audience Choice Award for her comedy script, The Divorce Photographer.

In her heartfelt acceptance speech, Keating reflected on her time at WIDC in Banff and her journey to complete Lucille's Ball, “I don't think I would have had the courage to go forward or the tenacity or the just not taking no for an answer, when I hit all of those hurdles if I hadn't established who I was in a really deep way, and that's what that program [WIDC] helped me to do.”

Eleven WIDC alumnae films in total screened at the festival including: Evangeline, directed by Karen Lam (FF, nominated for Best Canadian Feature); H

& G, directed by Danishka Esterhazy (FF, nominated for Best Canadian Feature); When I First Saw You, directed by Jane Hancock (Short); The Provider, directed by Brianne Nord-Stewart (Short); Pilgrims, directed by Marie Clements (Short); PLACenta, directed by Jules Koostachin, (Doc); How We Grow, directed by Erika Macpherson (Doc, nominated for Best Documentary); I Can't Remember, directed by Michelle Latimer (Music).

ABOUT FeFF

The Female Eye Film Festival (FeFF) is one of three remaining international women's film festival in Canada. The brainchild of filmmaker, actress, and WIDC alumna, Leslie Ann Coles, the FeFF is dedicated to showcasing films from around the world, directed by women. Along with festival business affairs director, Rebeka Antinia-Budrys, who happens to be Coles' daughter, Coles and her team of volunteers has managed to sustain a boutique festival feel while growing the FeFF brand into internationally recognized forum for developing both home-grown Canadian talent, while setting the stage for potential co-productions for women filmmakers. Live at the Palace opens its second season

By Dan Davidson

A Night at the Grand Opera House, 1899, marked Conrad Boyce's return to the stage at the Palace Grand Theatre after a 21 year absence.

The audience could hardly have expected him to frame the evening with the opening chorus from Shakespeare's Henry V, in which the audience is exhorted to let the bare stage serve for many varied settings over the next hour or so. Yet it was appropriate, for a bare stage, a piano (with a wooden crate for a bench) and a podium were the sum and substance of the stage that evening. Snippets from the play decorated the evening, as Boyce and his accompanist, Whitehorse music teacher Jillian Durham, offered the audience the sort of two person fare that might have been common in the year the original theatre was opened.

The current building is a reconstruction of the original, opened in 1962 for the seven week run of the Broadway musical, Foxy, starring Bert Lahr.

Durham had first toured the theatre with Boyce in 1993, when she was ten years old, and when Boyce, a friend of her family, was producing not one, but two, shows in the Palace that summer.

His production of La Siege Inferno, an attempt to recreate the original debut evening at Arizona Charlie Meadows' theatre, was based on the playbill for that show. In addition, Boyce provided The Trials of Suwanee McPhee, which was more in line with the typical musical melodramas that were the stock in trade of the Gaslight Follies.

By that time Boyce was a veteran of the Follies style, having played at the Frantic Follies as well as several seasons at the Gaslight, beginning in 1979. A stint reciting verses at the Robert Service Cabin served to give him a love of the Yukon's Bard.

1979 was also known for being the year of the last major flood in town, the opening of the Dempster Highway, and the unpegging of the price of gold. As for the Henry V bits, that play was written in 1599, 300 years before the Palace opened, and recitations from the Bard of Avon were fairly standard music hall fare.

The evening's performance included a lot of Tin Pan Alley songs that would have been in vogue at the end of the 19th century, including much material by the prolific Stephen Foster. In true Follies spirit, Boyce even had an audience participation segment during which a couple from the audience was invited to show everyone else how to waltz.

The June 22 show was the season opener for Live at the Palace Grand, season two, a co-production of Parks Canada and the Klondike Institute of Art and Culture. This revival of the Palace Grand, after a decade of evening silence following the demise of the Gaslight Follies, was spurred on by the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in First Nation's regional economic development plan, which identified the Palace Grand as a missing part of Dawson's tourism package.

Boyce continued in theatre after leaving in the Yukon and was, for a number of years, the technical manager of the Uxbridge Music Hall, just north of Toronto. In 2013 he concluded ten years as the publisher of the Uxbridge Cosmos, and has since returned to stages large and small, offering school performances of Services' work and producing a number of other shows in larger venues.

He has written a book about one of Uxbridge's distinctive architectural buildings, and has a couple of others in mind, including an annotated volume of Service's Yukon poems.

This summer, though, he opted to spend a few weeks as a tour director and so had the distinction of bringing his own audience of 22 to the Palace Grand, adding to the numbers in the house that night.

The next day he had arranged for about half of his group to travel to Eagle, Alaska, in a small flotilla of fishing boats, while the rest of them made their way by land on a Ruby Range tour bus.

Closing out the evening at the Palace, he indicated that he would be only too happy to do it all again next year should Live at the Palace manage to become an annual event.

VISITOR OF THE WEEK

Visitor Names: Pradip, Manu, Kanti, and Jay
Traveling from: San Diego, California
Comments about their visit: Our delightful visitors of the week showed up at the Dawson Visitor Centre to learn a little more about our fair city. The reason they wanted to visit Dawson City was to fulfill a lifetime dream. They thought that maybe – just maybe – they'd be able to find the gold they dreamed about as boys. We hope they find that elusive nugget on their tour tomorrow.

Visitor of the Week is brought to you by the Dawson City Chamber of Commerce and the Klondike Sun

Double, Double Toil and Trouble

Story & Photos
By Hannah Eden

Something magical has descended upon Dawson City in the form of Nicole Rayburn's new exhibition - Which Witch?

Housed at Confluence @ the SOVA gallery and supported by KIAC, Rayburn's in-progress exhibition, Which Witch? is a combination of photos and video work which walks the audience through historical constructions of witches and into contemporary representation.

Using her research from the Early Modern period witch hunts in Europe, Rayburn's video work highlights the different ways members of communities would identify witches.

"There's texts on how to identify witches, how to handle them in court," explains Rayburn.

"Because if they make eye contact, they might cast a spell on the judge."

Using historical wood-cuts and animating them, Rayburn's video engages audiences as they enter the white-washed room. Images of witches burning children and fornicating with the devil are just some of the pieces Rayburn discovered during her research for the project.

"The opening shot with the tower - I was at a festival in Germany in April," says Rayburn.

"It was a tower originally built as part of a city wall with windows for archers. But in the 1600's they used it to keep witches. There were 236 witches killed there - at that one place. They were kept in there and then they were executed. The space was terrifying."

Although the idea of witches and sorcery has evolved into a more comical or entertainment light in the last few decades, Rayburn's work highlights the sad truth of the Early Modern Period - mothers, wives and ordinary women of the 1600's were torched and killed through extensive European witch hunts.

"Often, they were widows - they were herbalist people. Often they were midwives, or single women of lower class - so there's a class base to it also," explains Rayburn.

As well as engaging audiences through video work, hundreds upon hundreds of faces of witches through the ages are hung from the walls of the SOVA gallery. Putting faces to these women was a big part of pulling the historic into a modern context.

Standing in front of the second part of her exhibition, Nicole Rayburn uses found photographs to trace the image of witches through the ages.

"I also think it's a kind of contemplation for looking at how this segment of the population was persecuted for being different by this authoritarian structure," says Rayburn.

"I think it's easy to look back into a historical point and think about those things because we are less tied to it with our own opinions and such. I think it's horrific. When you look at the scope and you look at how they designed torture devices specifically - it's such a huge and horrifying event. I also think it is kind of forgotten, but it is one of the biggest atrocities in Europe towards a certain group of people."

During Rayburn's attendance at the University of Western Ontario, her fascination with all things supernatural was fuelled.

"I did my thesis work and my masters work on werewolves and vampires and the idea of the 'other,'" shares Rayburn.

"I touched on witches but I never really had time, as it's such a big topic. So there's that and then teaching art history here, like culture studies and historical context so I started looking at images. You know, when you're looking at stuff from like 15th 16th century, it's fascinating. I mean you don't normally encounter that on a day to day basis."

Her new exhibition isn't the final product of Rayburn's desire to delve into the past. Traveling through Europe this month, Rayburn will be collecting more research to help formulate potential on-going projects as she travels through England, France and Germany viewing historical sites.

"Some of that footage will be in the next video; how to deal with a witch," reveals Rayburn.

"It's supposed to have a three-part. We'll see. It just depends on how it goes. Hopefully it will travel places."

To view Which Witch, head on over to Confluence @ the SOVA Gallery - exhibition open until July 12th.

THIS IS JUST MY OPINION

by Al Sider

Canada Day, What is it really about?

Canada Day has just recently, slipped away once again. I have discovered that many Canadians seem to have forgotten exactly what this day stands for. I can forgive our American neighbours for not knowing what Canada Day is all about, but our Canadian brothers and sisters to not know what it stands for is unforgivable. Many people see Canada Day as simply a "holiday", a day of celebration, and fireworks. This is so evident by the fact that a number of Canadians are attempting to petition the Canadian Government to have the "holiday" moved to a "floating holiday" so that it can always give a "long weekend". To me, it is obvious that these radical people have lost sight of what Canada Day really is all about. So, I will ask your endurance as I provide a condensed History lesson, in order to explain Why Canada Day exists.

Canada Day is about the formulation of the "British North America Act" in 1867. This Act united the three British colonies in existence in North America at that time, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and the Province of Canada; which consisted of Upper and Lower Canada, (the Southern portions of Ontario and Quebec). This formation and union of these Territories occurred on 1 July 1867, and Canada was called by the name "The Dominion of Canada" and 1 July became known as Dominion Day.

Every year since that time, the anniversary of this "British North America Act" has been celebrated, and was originally known as "Dominion Day". This name was changed to its current name, "Canada Day" in 1982 with the passing of the "Canada Act". In 1967, Canada celebrated its 100th Birthday, also known as "Confederation", and in 2012 Canada was 145 years old. Canada has undergone numerous historical events since its formation in 1867. Canada has been a major force in two World Wars as well as the Korean War. Canadian men, women and children of ALL races and creeds were very patriotic, and did everything that they could to help ensure that Canada remained Free.

Canada Day indeed is a celebration, and should remain on the same date it has been for more than 150 years. Canada Day is not however, simply about the celebration or the holiday, it is about those who bled, died, suffered and worked in order to keep our country separate from the United States of America. We still belong to the "British Commonwealth" and the British Monarch is still our Monarch, though we are "self-governing". The British Government does not levy taxes or their laws upon us, but our own Government does.

Canada has significantly grown as a nation since 1867. Canada now has ten Provinces and three Territories. Gradually, as exploration moved further and further west, other provinces joined the Confederation of Canada. Prince Edward Island and British Columbia joined by 1872. In 1870, The "North Western Territory" now called Manitoba joined Canada. The Northwest Territory and the Yukon Territory were formed and joined to Canada in 1898, following the Klondike Gold Rush. Alberta and Saskatchewan were created in 1905 and were made part of Canada. It was not until 1949 that Newfoundland joined Confederation, and in 1999 the Territory of Nunavut was created. Nunavut had previously been a part of the Northwest Territory and was already a part of Canada since 1898.

There are numerous lives which have been affected simply because of Confederation. What a different country this would have been, had any one or multiples of Provinces and Territories decided early on to never join the Confederation. Because they have all joined, our Country is unbroken from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Arctic to the majority of the 49th parallel, excepting only Alaska, which cuts Canada off from the Bering Sea. It is for these reasons that we celebrate Canada Day on July 1st, the Anniversary of the formation of our Country.

For those who desire to "change" this anniversary (especially the males out there) to a floating date; I ask you to consider your own personal anniversaries and birthdays. If your anniversary floated so that it Always fell on a weekend, you would never remember the date, men generally have a difficult enough time attempting to remember anniversaries and the birthdays of spouses, never mind having them move about from year to year. What would happen to our wonderful day of celebration if everyone forgot what day it would fall on? I suggest one word, and acronym, "KISS" which means quite simply "Keep It Simple Stupid"!

But as always,
This is just my Opinion.

A Klondike Home Companion plays the Palace Grand

By Dan Davidson

In addition to bringing some Outside talent to the Palace Grand's stage this summer for the Live at the Palace Grand season, the Klondike Institute of Art and Culture and Parks Canada are making use of Dawson's considerable pool of local talent. The first of two shows loosely based on the format of Garrison Keillor's Prairie Home Companion graced the stage on June 27.

A Klondike Home Companion was helmed by Ben Rudis and Brendan Reese, who host a show on CFYT-fm under the moniker The Kings of Dawson. In addition to introducing the musical acts for the evening, the pair provided several comedy skits as well as a routine in which current events in town were interpreted by readings from the Dawson Buy/Sell Facebook page.

John Ostrander was the first musical act, augmenting his folk stylings with a monologue about his original move to the Yukon.

The Handsome Devils, featuring Noosa, Ryan West and Susu Robbins, were the second local group. Their style, produced by guitar, mandolin and piano, varied with the lead singer.

The final musical set of the evening came the Vancouver based quartet called Blackberry Wood. They play a style that can only be described with hyphens: alt-country-gypsy-circus music. It's a mini-cabaret with guitar, saxophone, trumpet and upright bass. And those of us who were wondering why they would want to haul that monster bass around, we all found out during their finale number.

Another race in the books

*World's longest annual canoe and kayak race - 715 km / 444 miles
Whitehorse to Dawson City, Yukon*

The 16th annual Yukon River Quest was memorable for its rocky start with all teams battling breakers that blew up with a southerly squall as they were getting on Lake Laberge. But after persevering through those very tough conditions (including some dramatic rescues), most teams carried on and had good weather all the way to Dawson City.

The river was lower than usual, resulting in slower times overall. First team in was the British tandem kayak Two Numb-nuts paddled by Shaun Thrower and Steve King in 45 hours, 30 minutes, 32 seconds, followed by solo kayaker Dave Hutchinson of the United States in 46:25:52, the Yukon voyageur team Ts'alvit (Gwich'in for Arctic Loon) in 48:43:26, and the top tandem canoe Puha no Huanie (Esteve Phillippe from French Polynesia and Esteve Nicholas from France) in 49:54:10. They were the only teams to break the 50 hour barrier this year.

Overall, 48 teams finished of the 66 that were registered. There were 18 scratches. See complete results on our 2014 Race Tracker page.

The race looks a bit less dramatic from this end as the paddlers arrive over a couple of days.

DAWSON CITY MUSIC FESTIVAL

Over the coming issues, the Klondike Sun will feature a number of artists appearing in the 2014 Dawson City Music Festival. To see this year's complete line-up and buy your tickets, visit www.dcmf.com. The festival takes place July 18-20.

Artist Profile: Monkey Junk

A self-described cocktail of Swamp R&B, Soul Boogie, and Bedroom Funk, MonkeyJunk is an Ottawa-based blues band with a style all their own. In six short years together, MonkeyJunk has already amassed an impressive fan-base and earned a Juno award (2012), 20 Maple Blues awards (2008-13), a Canadian Independent Music Award (2010), and a Blues Music Award (2010). A critical contender with credibility amongst the people, MonkeyJunk's riotous jams have earned props from Canadian music legend David Wilcox, who likened their unique roots-influenced sound to the father of modern Chicago blues Muddy Waters— pretty impressive comparison!

MonkeyJunk is a trio featuring Steve Marriner on lead vocals, baritone guitar, keys and wailing harmonica; Tony Diteodoro on guitars, with lots of slide; and Matt Sobb holding steady on drums. According to Peter Goddard of the Toronto Star, MonkeyJunk's unusual no-bass lineup has its roots in historic bass-less blues outfits such as Hound Dog Taylor and the Houserockers. MonkeyJunk has toured Canada extensively, and made forays to Europe too— their next moves are continuing to expand their fan base here at home in Canada, heading back to Europe, and digging into the American scene. With elements of Cajun rawness, swanky swagger, and old-time religion, MonkeyJunk deliver their own blend of funky, sassy, rump-shaking kind of deep blues music that will keep you dancing all night long.

Artist Profile: Pharis and Jason Romero

The sweet and sassy chemistry between Pharis and Jason is just one facet of their charm; this married duo delivers harmonies as delightful and dreamy as their stage presence. Pharis and Jason Romero's story is a classic: a matchmaker, some scratchy old records, a custom banjo and a flyfishing trip all conspired to a meeting in 2007 at an old-time fiddle jam. She was living in Victoria, BC and he was living in Arcata, CA. Both had been playing music for decades and loved early country, old time, folk, blues, and bluegrass. She sent him a copy of the wonderful 1928 recording Tupelo Blues from Hoyt Ming & His Pepsteppers and, well, they married 2 months later. In 2010 they moved their home and the J. Romero Banjo Company north to the BC interior, to her hometown of Horsefly. In this way-out-there small place, surrounded by wilderness and good people, they build their finely crafted banjos, and play and write the music, new and old, that they adore.

Pharis & Jason's releases continue to attract audiences and radio play globally. Their delight in making music for music's sake no doubt contributes to the joyful lack of pretense in their albums and performances and to the rapidly-growing fan-base for both. Enjoy this earnestly enchanting duo in the warmth of the midnight sun at DCMF 2014.

Junior rangers enjoy camp

Rear-Admiral Jennifer Bennett, speaks with Ben Lutz, 13, from Dawson City during the closing ceremony of the Enhanced Training Session on June 28, 2014.

By Capt Steve Watton

Five Junior Rangers and one Canadian Ranger from Dawson City were amongst more than 200 Junior Canadian Rangers (JCR) from 35 communities across the North to attend a seven day summer camp during the Enhanced Training Session (ETS) offered by the First Canadian Ranger Patrol Group (1 CRPG) in Whitehorse, Yukon from June 21 to 28, 2014.

During the ETS held at the Whitehorse Cadets Summer Training Centre, JCR training centered around the three circles of learning in traditional, life and Ranger skills with a focus on building confidence, teamwork and leadership.

Youth participate in a number of challenging activities that included; white water rafting, zip-lining, rock climbing, swift water rescue, canoeing, repelling, trapping, woodsmanship, horseback riding and monkido.

Many JCRs found the monkido event, which consisted of 48 obstacles and suspended games of wobbly bridges, tarzan swing, hanging nets, tightropes lumber jack logs, spinning bongo balls, seven zip lines that climb, zip and swing through the boreal tree-tops, the most challenging while white water rafting was the most fun.

“Laughter and screams echo through the park as the JCRs attempted the two to eighteen meters above ground monkido challenge.” said Warrant Officer Ken Leet, JCR ETS Training Coordinator, “Although some JCRs did not brave all stands, this event helped to build trust and confidence through a practical skill activity in a fun and safe outdoor environment.

Many of the Junior Rangers were astonished by the mosquitoes and other bugs they encountered. For some, it was their first time away from home which marked an opportunity to see a new place, practice their second language or learn a new skill.

“The camp was an opportunity for the JCRs to interact with each other and with the Canadian Rangers,” said Captain Yannick Fergusson, Officer-in-charge of ETS, “It also provided the opportunity for JCR leaders to develop skills by taking the younger and inexperienced members under their wing.”

Throughout the week, senior JCRs were employed in leadership positions to guide and supervise the younger Junior Rangers throughout training under the auspices of a Canadian Ranger patrol leader and a patrol mentor.

Over 50 Canadian Rangers from across the North and 15 staff from 1 CRPG provided assistance in running the Enhanced Training Sessions making it the best summer experience for everyone.

The vision of the Junior Canadian Rangers program is to strengthen remote and isolated Canadian communities through a responsible and practical youth program that embraces culture and tradition, promotes healthy living, positive self-image, and reflects the proud military legacy of the Canadian Rangers.

Isaak Dube and Cassidy Everitt from Dawson City participate in swift water rescue on the Yukon River, Whitehorse.
