The George Black Ferry reverted to off-season hours as fall rushed by and winter arrived. The first signs of ice in the daytime showed up during this layout weekend but there's no pullout date at this writing, though some of the equipment was put in place in the fortnight between issues. Dawson looks back at a good tourism year

While the stories were not uniformly the same, it can certainly be said that the Fall Tourism Roundup held at the Downtown Hotel on October 16 was full of positive accounts and generally good feelings about the season that had just ended.

Speaking for the Klondike Visitors Association (KVA) president Brian Stethem, Exec. Dir. Gary Parker and Market & Events Manager Paul Robitaille were singing from the same hymnal.

"It was a good year," Robitaille said, with a full event calendar, lots of television exposure from the Klondike mini-series to the Culinary Arts/Sourtoe feature on the Steven and Chris Show, and the soon to be christened new slot machines that were about to go into service at Diamond Tooth Gerties that same week.

The KVA is still working on the implementation of its new marketing plan, with an increased focus on non-tour travellers, recognizing that the tour companies already promote the Klondike. The plan aims to attract more travellers from Canada, the USA and overseas as well as travellers from what they are calling the Nearby Market, which includes Yukoners, people travelling the Dempster Highway, and Alaskans.

It's too soon to say how successful the efforts are, but the KVA is working on establishing a local baseline to enable it to track progress and percentage increases.

Next summer's season will be kick started by the annual Tourism Industry Association of the Yukon conference, which will take place here towards the end of April.

If Yukon Tourism's numbers are correct, the combination of efforts by the KVA and the Klondike focus of Holland-America, may be having an effect. Pierre Germain reported that a combination of statistics gathered from airport arrivals and traffic over the Top of the World Highway showed the region increasing its arrivals by 21% to the end of August in a year when the overall stats for the territory were down by 4%.

Since this happened in spite of Dawson having one of the wettest summers it has had in some time, something else must be working for the region. Germain said that the decline elsewhere was being attributed in part to the collapse of the ferry dock in Skagway, plus the impact of that same wet weather on the other parts of the territory.

Visitor Information Centres will have expanded seasons next summer, he said, running from May 1 until

More than 30 business owners turned out for the annual fall tourism roundup discussion.

September 30. Campgrounds will also be open until the end of September. This year's extension was seen to have been a success. Next spring's training session for VIC staffs will take place in Dawson.

Air North's Ed Peart reported an excellent season and great success with its Holland-America traffic to and from Fairbanks. Some 15,000 passengers flew on 180 round trips. He reported that the runway in Dawson needs to be upgraded. Paving it would solve a lot of issues, both now and in the future.

Karen Dubois, Exec. Dir. of the Dawson City Arts Society (DCAS) indicated that the society had had a busy and productive summer, but that it had really been almost too

Karen Jenkins reported that the Eldorado Hotel had had an excellent summer, and Mark Mather said that the General Store had also done very well, though freight costs were problematic.

Pat and Diane Brooks, who run the Gold Rush Campground just outside the downtown core, left word that they had had the strongest summer since they bought the business 10 years ago.

The Dawson City Museum's executive director, Laura Mann, reported that it had been the Museum's strongest year since 2009, though she was disappointed with the low attendance by Holland-America's visitors, something she hopes to be able to remedy next year.

The Dawson City Music Festival's Jenna Roebuck reported an "amazing vibe" this year. She was disappointed that some press reports didn't understand that the DCMF has downsized deliberately to make itself a more community friendly event. Next year, the festival will be a week later – July 24 to 26. This move is partly because of technical issues that arose when Atlin moved its festival to the weekend before DCMF, but Roebuck says it may also enable the Dawson festival to stop competing with Yellowknife's Folk on the Rocks festival, which has been on the same weekend. The two festivals might actually be able to cooperate for talent instead of competing for it.

At the Dänojà Zho Cultural Centre Glenda Bolt reported that admissions were unexpectedly down, but gift shop sales were up.

Parks Canada employees reported a good year and quite strong attendance in the tours during their trial extended season. The numbers have been "sent up the food chain" as one person put it, but it's too soon yet to know if the powers that be will think them sufficient to justify continuing the extra two weeks the agency got this year.

All in all, the major players on the Dawson tourism scene were very positive about the season just past and looking to next year with some optimism.

Uffish Thoughts: Downsizing as a new Northern Strategy

By Dan Davidson

One facts about Canada is that our population tends to be urbanized territory of all. Out $3.3 million in claims. unevenly distributed across the provinces, most people live within a few hundred kilometres of our southern border with the United States of America. This imbalance of land to population is stretched still further by the fact that the preponderance of Canada's citizens live in its major cities.

LETTER

Statement on the Recent Military Deaths by the Dominion President of the Royal Canadian Legion

Comrades:

Yesterday's (October 22) events in Ottawa coupled with those in St.-Jean-sur-Richelieu, serve to bring home the reality of the world that we live in today. Years ago, and even as recently as the past few days, Canadians left our country to defend our rights and our way of life. The events of this past week in Quebec and our nation's capital have now brought home to Canadians that there are those who do not respect our values and are willing to harm the very fabric of our society.

Canadians are respected the world over and have joined with likeminded nations in many conflict areas around the globe. Because we have been there, and fought alongside our allies to protect what we as Canadians all hold dear, the reality that there are those who will do us harm has come to our shores and our communities.

All Legionnaires join me with deep respect in honouring our personnel who serve in the Canadian Armed Forces and our security and first responder organizations. Our hearts and sympathies go out to the families of Warrant Officer Patrice Vincent and Corporal Nathan Cirillo. There is no sense to the random killing of unarmed people who served so valiantly. Howard Zinn, the noted author, historian and Veteran of the Second World War once said, "There is no flag large enough to cover the shame of killing innocent people."

We as Canadians have a proud heritage of service and compassion. Our principles will not be diminished, but as we move forward we will have a new sense of vigilance.

Today, in recognition of the events we have all experienced. The Royal Canadian Legion joins the Government of Canada in half-masting our flags in respect of our fallen comrades and their families. This can begin immediately and will continue until further notice.

The Royal Canadian Legion is well engaged in its plans for Remembrance services to take place in cities, towns and villages across Canada. While recent events may have raised concerns we will stand strong with our partners in security and first-response to deliver these services Canadians have come to embrace. As we approach this Remembrance period, we ask all Canadians to join us in honouring and respecting those who are serving our nation, those who have served so valiantly and those who have made the supreme sacrifice for our values and freedoms.

We Will Remember Them.

Why is LNG being shipped to Inuvik?

Dear Editor:

On September the 30th, a tanker truck hauling liquefied natural gas (LNG) from Delta B.C. to Inuvik N.W.T. failed to negotiate a tight corner at the AFD station by the Ogilvie Bridge outside Dawson City and flopped over into the ditch.

There could have been a serious incident. The tanker held a tremendous amount of LNG, massively compressed natural gas (methane) that has been chilled to minus 162 degrees Celsius – the temperature at which methane liquefies and shrinks to one 600th the original volume.

Fortunately, the emergency measures protocols worked well, and the LNG moved on to Inuvik.

Nobody wants to see another incident like this so people have been thinking of ways to avoid a repeat.

Some have suggested that if Yukon were to allow fracking in Eagle Plain there would be no need to truck LNG all the way from southern B.C. to Inuvik. The claim is that this would make Dawson City and all other points along the route safer. This claim is not supported by the facts.

There is no proven gas in Eagle Plain. There probably is gas there, although the current exploration by Northern Cross is targeting oil. Fracking might well be a way to extract gas from Eagle Plain, although Northern Cross does not particularly want to frack there because fracking is really expensive. Operating in remote places like Eagle Plain is already expensive enough.

There are trillions of cubic feet of natural gas under the Mackenzie Delta near Inuvik, all discovered, with wells drilled and ready to go. Incidentally, all this gas is conventional, meaning there is no need to frack for it.

So why, if there is so much conventional gas in places near Inuvik is LNG being trucked all the way from the Lower Mainland?

When Imperial Oil, Shell and other companies discovered gas under the Mackenzie Delta in the 1970s, they anticipated a pipeline along the Mackenzie Valley would be built relatively soon to get their gas to bigger markets. On speculation, they hooked up Inuvik to gas for heating and electricity generation.

As we know, the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline has not been built, and with an estimated price tag of over $20 billion, it may never be built

The gas field that fed Inuvik turned out not to be as abundant as originally thought, and about a year ago the gas ran out. Inuvik was as shocked as anyone when they asked the companies to hook them up to the next gas field and were turned down. It appears that the companies think that the small consumption of Inuvik does not justify the cost of the hook up: $50-$70million.

So, if it is not economic to exploit the gas that is known to exist near Inuvik, it is not going to be economic to use the gas that might be under Eagle Plain that might require the very expensive technique of fracking to extract. An export opportunity or a local market from new mines might make it more feasible, but both of those scenarios would mean far more trucks and risks, not fewer.

Allowing fracking in Yukon would not reduce the risk we face from LNG tanker trucks rolling through our communities. Reducing our reliance on fossil fuels would.

Allowing fracking in Yukon would introduce new risks to the land, air, water, the public and our highways and road network.

Sincerely, Sebastian Jones

Ghosts in the Goldfields

by Joann Vriend, Dawson City

I can't tell you if there are ghosts in the Klondike. You'll have to decide that for yourself. I can tell you it often feels as if Jack London is pointing to the river that brought him here, and took him to the Bering sea in a small boat after a winter of digging and panning. I sometimes hear Dick North's voice, telling the tale of how he, Joe Henry, and Robin Burian brought one London Cabin to California. There are times when I see Dawson through Laura Berton's eyes as I walk up to the lookout on the Moosehide

What happened one spring day on Bonanza Road was different. "There are strange things done in the midnight sun," Robert Service warned us, and it was a strange day when I headed up the creek to explore an old gold mine. It was on McKay gulch, and I'd been told there was a stamp mill up there somewhere. The stamp mill crushed rock so the gold could be collected and sorted on a shaker deck. Why was I interested, I asked myself? A whim, I admitted. An old miner had told me about it, it was a sunny day, and the idea that this machine made mostly of wood, would still be there, intrigued me.

The day quickly changed. I hadn't even got as far as Claim 33 before the clouds rolled in. These weren't fluffy clouds. They were dense, vertical, angry looking affairs. Cumulonimbus. Why not turn back, a voice in the back of my head said, but there was a louder voice, from who knows where, that encouraged me to "never turn back unless you have to." The road became muddy as soon as the rain came pelting down, but I had a fourwheel drive, and I had been in the north for a few years. I could do it.

It wasn't long before the mud became a serious impediment. I carried on and eventually came to the Upper Bonanza turnoff. The rain had stopped but the sky was still dark, and the water was threatening to wash out the bridge. I crossed it before I could change my mind.

I was alone, but not alone. In my mind the road was lined with the old timers, the ones who tackled the outdoors with pick and shovel, and hope for a better life. I could see their faces, full of determination, and their clothes, caked with the dirt of the trail. Some of them would stay because they didn't have the money to get home. Some of them would find gold, but did it satisfy, I wondered. Was it all they thought it would be? Or was it the magnificent country that held them, as it held me?

Upper Bonanza was slippery and wet, and I met a truck barreling down the road, almost putting me into the ditch. Someone in a hurry to get to town. "Should I turn around?" I wondered, after the fright I got from looking down to where I would have been if I had slid a few inches further. I was too busy concentrating to let that thought take hold.

Another truck passed, almost as quickly. This time I held my spot on the road and let the other driver move over. He had a bank to his left after all, not a canyon. Then I glanced down at my speedometer to check the mileage from the turnoff. "McKay Gulch should be right around here," I muttered to myself, and there it was.

I turned in and faced a raging stream. It looked like trucks had been driving through, so I headed into the swirling water. The sky had opened up again, and it was dusky dark. There were rocks tumbling down and I had to keep going, but I could feel my feet getting wet. I should have scouted it out before heading into the water. Too late for that. I was sweating, twisting my steering wheel this way and that, bogging down and seeing only fog ahead of me.

Then I went limp. Lost control. No strength in my legs to keep my foot on the gas, no grip in my hands to maneuver the steering wheel. My truck kept gong, steadily making its way over the creek. My front wheels hit the road on the other side, and then my back wheels. I jerked upright and started driving again.

What was that? Who was that? I smelled pipe tobacco. No time to think about it. The trail of gravel and ruts took all my concentration, and then there it was. The stamp mill, blending into the trees and rocks, but still standing, and clearly visible in the fog. Big wooden beams, dark brown, standing upright. Two wheels, made of wood, still attached. Pieces of metal in the surrounding brush, and a hint of a trail, leading up and around the wood and metal that was left of the operation. I got out of the truck. And then it happened again. My legs went weak. I fell to my knees. I stared at the scene before me.

There was a chute feeding sand and rock onto a metal shaker deck. The deck was vibrating. There was a man standing there. He had a beard and carried a long handled brush. He seemed to be sweeping bits of rock down and off the deck. The glint of gold behind wooden slats caught my attention. A loud banging noise thundered in my ears, and I could see up the hill from the shaker deck. There was a piece of steel banging down on the rocks, pulverizing them. I wanted to ask the man about it, but my mouth wouldn't move.

Suddenly I was up the trail and there was another serious looking individual, tipping a cart full of rock and sand into a chute that led down to the shaker deck at the bottom.

Again I tried to talk, but no sound came out of my mouth.

Then I was further up the hill. There were rails and carts were going up and down the hill, full cars down and empty ones up. A tall, thin character with a floppy hat was standing at a hopper, emptying the full carts, filling the empty ones. l. I could see the rail line above him. The carts were connected with steel cable, and the full ones were propelling the empty ones up the hill. The man seemed to be using a braking system, slowing the full carts down. Who were these people?

Suddenly I was further up the hill. I could still see the tracks, but I could also see people, going into an underground tunnel, and carts full of rock coming out of the same tunnel. I was trying to talk, trying to wave, trying to attract attention, curious about the whole operation. My body and mind seemed disconnected. How did I get here anyhow? Where was my truck? Why wouldn't my legs work?

Suddenly the whole scene shifted. My head was full of pain and my ankle was throbbing. I was lying just ahead of my truck, among rocks and brush, off the trail with the stamp mill above me. There was no one there. The mill was quiet. A raven squawked and flapped his huge wings. I tried to get up. My ankle wouldn't let me. I pulled myself with my hands, and shuffled along the ground until I reached my truck. Then I pulled myself up onto one leg and maneuvered into the driver's seat. I must have slid in the dirt and twisted my ankle while trying to climb up to the mill. But what about all those miners, all that noise, the ore carts, the rails, the tunnel? Ghosts, I thought. I didn't believe in ghosts, but these were people from the past.

The sky was clear now apart from a few wispy clouds and there was no hint of the storm I had driven through earlier. No deep water, no mud on the road. Again, as I crossed the creek, the hint of pipe tobacco tickled my nose.

As I rode back to town, I felt tired, as if I had traveled to a far country. I longed for the familiarity of my town, my home. I wanted to talk to someone who would explain all this

Then it came to me. No one would believe me. I had stepped into another time and no one was with me. I would never forget those men, toiling away years after they had died. Were they still trying to fulfill their dreams, restless for a better life, even after they died?

It's up to you. Will you believe the scientists who tell you that ghosts do not exist? Will you listen to those who tell you the mind can do strange things, even create visions of the past? Will you join the skeptics who have an explanation for everything? Or will you open that part of your brain that says, "Maybe there is more to it." Will you listen to those of us who have looked into the eyes of the dead and tried to discern why they wouldn't speak? Do you wonder if all of those who have gone before us have really

I can't tell you what to think. I only know that I was never very sure of anything after that day up at the stamp mill. And I never jumped into my truck again, without sniffing the air for the smell of pipe tobacco.

Yukon Now marketing program unveiled at tourism open house

WHITEHORSE (October 24, 2014) —The details of a new Yukon tourism marketing program were shared today during the annual Tourism Open House at the Whitehorse Visitor Information Centre.

The Yukon Now program is being jointly funded by the Yukon government and by the federal government's Canadian Northern Economic Development Agency (CanNor). This is the territory's largest tourism marketing initiative to date. As announced September 4 in Whitehorse, each government will invest $1.8 million over two years, increasing the tourism marketing budget by $3.6 million.

"I'm very pleased to provide more details of Yukon Now to the Yukon tourism industry, as well as members of the Yukon public," Minister of Tourism and Culture Mike Nixon said. "This marketing program will build on existing momentum to raise awareness in Canada of Yukon as a year-round travel destination. One innovative aspect of the program will be the direct involvement of Yukoners in telling their own stories to help market our fascinating and beautiful territory."

A digital storytelling component coordinated with the Screen Production Yukon Association (SPYA) and will engage local producers in the development of web series.

In addition, a Yukongenerated content component will invite the public to share their best Yukon experiences through video, photos and written content. Community meetings in Whitehorse, Dawson, Haines Junction and Watson Lake will provide more opportunities for the public to provide input about what makes Yukon special.

A key component of the marketing program will be the development and airing of highly engaging television commercials promoting Yukon as a winter and summer travel destination.

"The Tourism Open House was a great opportunity to provide the details of Yukon Now, including information on how we will be inviting Yukoners to share their stories with Canadians across the country," Nixon added. "This program is taking us in a new and exciting direction and I believe it will put Yukon on the map like never before."

The program will primarily focus on the Canadian market but includes strategic investments in overseas and U.S. markets.

Review of the Pioneer Utility Grant Act and regulation

WHITEHORSE (October 23, 2014) —The Government of Yukon proposes to modernize the Pioneer Utility Grant Act and regulation to ensure Yukon seniors will continue benefiting from the grant in the future.

The Pioneer Utility Grant is a subsidy program for all Yukoners 65 and older who rent or own their own home. It is designed to assist seniors with paying the high cost of utilities.

"The number of Yukon seniors is anticipated to increase significantly in the near future, placing an increasing strain on the Pioneer Utility Grant," Minister of Health and Social Services Doug Graham said. "As a result, we need to update the legislation and regulations to ensure the program remains flexible and sustainable to meet the needs of Yukon seniors."

The current act allows the Department of Health and Social Services to consider increasing differential costs of fuel for those living in rural Yukon, when prescribing the pioneer grant amount.

"To ensure that the grant continues to meet the growing needs of the senior population in the long run, we also propose adopting an income testing model," Graham added.

Proposed changes to the act would include:

- moving the initial application date from October 1 to July 1;
- detailing what is required to apply for the grant;

- establishing an income testing model to determine grant amounts;
- expanding eligibility requirements; and
- expanding regulation making powers to support implementing the act.

Earlier this month, the Health and Social Services minister and departmental officials met with representatives of seniors groups who voiced support about the suggested changes, as they will help ensure long-term sustainability and availability of the program to seniors who need it most.

The Chilkoot Tale

By Shyloh van Delft, Tagish

Come grab a drink, and let me tell you a riveting tale,

Pull up a chair and settle right in - over here, at my table;

I'll tell you of a long ago time, when many men died in fear,

Those desperate folks didn't stand a chance but wait, do you have your beer?

One of the greatest cities, Dyea was a place of hope,

Prospectors lived a life of sinning here, doing what they could to cope;

The trails had been arduous, the land cruel and harsh,

But the city was a gateway, with bright and welcoming hearths.

Through the valley a madness, and the thrumming chant of gold, Lured far from the south the innocent young and experienced old; Danger, lust, anticipation - it was part of the air they breathed,

A last stop before the Klondike, they packed all that could be squeezed.

Up and over the blinding pass, down the Chilkoot trail,

Straining loads on aching backs, their strength grew ever frail;

The trees seemed to close and whisper, in a silent foreign speech,

Crowding around the trail, winding through craggy peaks.

Authors on 8th

The searing snow and silent hills echoed their anguished toil,

And in this treacherous land as the shadows leered their fate began to uncoil; In the icy mountains they were trapped, and on them the thunder fell, Many souls were lost in this blanket of icy hell.

In a silent hollow where time stands still their bodies were laid to rest,

And moss-gray stone was erected there for the men who tried their best;

Under the ancient boughs of wizened trees, their sadness is hard to resist,

And the murmured rush of a nearby creek becomes enveloped in the mist.

This is the story of the Chilkoot, and the men who passed away,

Faded memories are all that's left, their gravesites are in decay:

I bid you go there, walk around - become one with what you've been told,

You just might hear the softest footstep, and faintly breathed rasp for gold.

New fire truck aids fire response in Klondike region

WHITEHORSE (October 16, 2014) —A new mini-pumper fire truck that was presented to Klondike region-based volunteer firefighters last week will enhance response to fire emergencies in the community.

"It is important that the dedicated staff and volunteers in Dawson City and the surrounding areas have the proper equipment to do their job," Minister of Community Services Brad Cathers said. "This truck is another example of the Yukon government's commitment to supporting the safety, health and sustainability of Yukon communities, and our increased investment in fire protection."

The mini-pumper truck was purchased specifically to aid response to West Dawson and was made possible thanks to recent modifications to the Mutual Aid Agreement signed between the City of Dawson and the Yukon government.

"This truck fills a gap in equipment and subsequent service needs we had identified," Dawson Fire Chief Jim Regimbal said. "By adding this truck to our fleet we can now respond faster and more efficiently to fire emergencies in the West Dawson and Sunnydale area, as well as within Dawson City and the surrounding areas."

This mini-pumper truck can fight fires and transport five fully equipped firefighters. It is equipped with:

- a quick-attack four-wheel drive chassis;
- a foam system that allows for faster suppression with less water;
- an LED light package for night time responses; and
- a 300 gallon water tank

"This truck brings valuable fire protection to our community and is an excellent example of two governments coming together to provide the best service possible to its citizens," Mayor of Dawson City Wayne Potoroka said. "City of Dawson Council understands the importance of looking out for our neighbours. This truck and our mutual aid agreement with the Yukon government to provide fire protection for the Klondike Valley, and more recently West Dawson, exemplifies that value while ensuring effective fire response."

Roache's Corner by Mike Roache

No matter the murder of soldier Nathan Cirillio, Canadians will not defer to the fear of terrorism

By Peter Stockland Senior Director Publications and Media Cardus

HAMILTON, ON/ Troy Media/ - Toronto Liberal MP John McKay was, at that moment, the admirable embodiment of the honest politicians who lead us.

"That is an excellent question," he said. "I have absolutely no idea what the answer is."

We were standing at the corner of Metcalfe and Albert streets in Ottawa, a few hundred metres south from where a gunman was shot dead in the Hall of Honour of Canada's Parliament and a few blocks west of the War Memorial, where Hamilton-based soldier Nathan Cirillo had just been murdered by that same gunman.

The question put to McKay was the obvious ambient mystery of the day: how on earth, after killing Cirillo in broad daylight, could that gunman have made his way onto Parliament Hill carrying a loaded long gun, then gotten past Parliamentary security into the building itself?

Because of the location of the Liberals' weekly caucus meeting room, McKay and his colleagues were able to exit the building, unlike their Conservative and New Democrat counterparts who barricaded themselves inside rooms that flank the entrance hallway where the shooting occurred.

He was close enough, though, to hear the "pop, pop, pop" of gunfire - "more than three, fewer than 10" - which he thought was the sound of construction work before he was ordered to dive for cover.

And, having made his way to safety, what was McKay doing? His duty. He was standing patiently talking to a group of reporters in a "scrum," trying his best to explain what had just happened, openly acknowledging what he did not know. To state the blindingly obvious, he was experiencing shock from the terror mere moments old. He had to fight to control tears. Yet he did his polite, deferential, instinctive duty to communicate, through the media, what he could to his fellow citizens.

Another ambient mystery already percolating even as police teams swarmed through cordoned-off downtown Ottawa hunting no-one-knew-what was: Will this change us? Will we be a different Canada the day after than we were in the minutes before the killing of Nathan Cirillo, the gunfire assault on our Parliament? Watching the sheer, utter normalcy of John McKay dutifully answering questions at the confluence of the chaos, I knew the answer was "no." It won't change us. Why? Because we are Canadians.

To say that we are Canadians is not to say that we imagine ourselves as some agglomeration of super heroes - or hyper stoics - immune from the vicissitudes of an outside world gone mad. To say that would be to say that being Canadian is being delusional. In our hearts, if not always on our lips, we acknowledge we have no such immunity. To pretend we believe otherwise is either myth making or mischief making or both.

We know, in our present moment and in our history, that we are indelibly, painfully marked by the world. Nathan Cirillo was guarding our War Memorial when he was killed. In less than three weeks, on November 11, we will lay wreaths there as an act of memory for those who died doing their duty all along the boundary where the world touches Canada. We will be reminded, contra myth makers and mischief makers, that we are a people who fight and die to stand on guard.

We are known as a polite and deferential people, because by and large we are. During Wednesday's events, a group of us snuck up to a spot outside the National Arts Centre to watch activity at the police command post. Spotting us, an officer rushed over and ordered us out, telling us that we were putting ourselves in danger.

"You don't have to shout," I said. "There was nothing that said we couldn't be here."

"I'm sorry," he said, "but you'll have to move."

I'm sorry but you'll have to move. In the middle of that emotional tinderbox. I have been in other countries where the response in such tense circumstances was a gun barrel pointed at my head.

Though we are dutifully deferential, however, we do not defer to fear. We never have. I believe we never will. There is something in us, as people, that will not admit it.

Sure, there will be reviews and inquiries and reports and reassuring sounds that we're looking into it so it never happens again. Sure, there will be "security upgrades" for access to Parliament Hill, whatever that means in an age where, as Wednesday's events proved yet again, security means enduring time-consuming inconvenience to obtain the illusory comfort of the impossible.

But we will not be changed by fear. And if the question of how that is possible when much of the rest of the world reacts by hunkering down, blockading in, assuming the protective position, is put to us, we will answer, following the admirable lead of our honest politicians: "That is an excellent question. We have no idea what the answer is. We're just being Canadians."

From the Yukon Quest Newsletter

By Laurie Parris Executive Director, Yukon

It's been a whirlwind couple of months as we continue to prepare for the 32nd running of the Yukon Quest race. I looked up and realized that summer is officially done with the passing of the the Labour Day weekend. There aren't too many places in the world where you will hear a collective HOORAY! for the coming of winter

We have had an outstanding first day of sign ups in both Yukon and Alaska with almost record numbers of mushers coming to sign up in person the first day and it promises to be an exciting race line up for 2015.

The official race team has been hired, meetings and planning are well underway, mushers have begun their training routines and February 7th is only (four) months away.

Sign up day was a huge success in Whitehorse and so much fun combining it with our big community dog party "Bark Fest".

The community came out in force to support the Yukon Quest mushers and team dogs as well as house pets took part in the many fun contests during the day. Celebrity judges had a tough time choosing the best dressed dog, best trick and best howler from the crowd.

There were lots of great prizes for all of the winners generously donated by our sponsors including:

Air North needs a paved runway in Dawson

Air North had a very successful summer season in Dawson City in 2014, landing some 15,000 passengers on its Holland-America runs alone with 180 return flights – mostly with the 737s – in addition to its regularly scheduled flights to Old Crow and Inuvik.

According to Air North's Ed Peart, one thing that was made very clear by that experience is that the runway at Dawson needs to be paved.

Peart praised the work that was done last summer to keep the runway in use in spite of the extra rain, but emphasized that the wear and tear on the runway and on the specially equipped planes is considerable. More to the point, those planes have a limited life span and it won't be too many years before they have to be retired and won't be able to be replaced or maintained.

"We'll need another plane to handle the volume of passengers and basically that means we will need a paved runway. We're trying to get support from various groups to make that happen."

"Rain beats up a runway, period," he said, "but to have that much weight on a runway, there was some significant rutting in the runway, and standing water.

"The (airport people) came in and graded and packed all night to get it going again. They put in new turn-arounds ... so they've done a really good job in making sure that runway was ready to go. Paving would solve that."

Two years ago a consultant indicated that there wasn't a business case for paving the runway yet, but Peart said the changes in Holland-America's transportation plans have changed that situation and, if they are to continue that way, definitely make the business case.

The new Canada Border Services Agency station at the airport was super, he said.

"They could clear 100 people in about 12 minutes."

Dawson Airport, with the new Customs Station on the left, on a foggy Klondike morning.

Holland-America charter customers actually did not go through the terminal, which would have been hard pressed to accommodate those numbers, but exited the plane, went through customs and straight onto the Westmark's buses for transit to town.

The flights between Dawson and Fairbanks were about 40 minutes when they were direct, but that was not always the case. There are certain times when the US Military blocks all the air space between the two communities.

"Sometimes we have to divert all the way around that air space. That adds about 30 to 40 minutes to the flight ... and translates into a lot of gas that we have to use. We're all trying to keep costs controlled so that this remains long term for many years to come to keep the tourism flowing."

Air North is asking interested Yukon parties, from the government to the Klondike Visitors Association, to support a lobbying effort to influence Alaskan regulators and the military to come up with a regular daily clear corridor.

Summer flights on the regular sched were changed this summer to eliminate what Peart called a bottleneck between Dawson and Whitehorse. Old Crow and Inuvik passengers were having a hard time getting on the planes as they were already full on the southern part of the run. For next summer the company is looking at adding a Dawson specific evening service on Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

It is not known at this point whether Air North will have the Holland-America contract for next summer, but negotiations are under way, he

Keeping busy on the Berton House beat

By Dan Davidson

September was a busy month on the Berton House beat.

Our last writer-in-residence, Anik See, presented two of her essays to a group of 15 people at the Dawson Community Library. Anik (that's Aneek) has a particular focus on landscape and people's reactions to it, as well as an interest in the narratives people tell each other and themselves about their lives. Both themes were featured in the pieces she read that night.

It was an interesting evening and left me with a number of things I wanted to quiz her about when we sat down to do what I refer to as the "exit interview" near the end of her residency a few days later.

One of Anik's unique experiences was to bundle her family off on a Yukon River canoe trip – inspired by the Yukon River Quest – when her son and partner arrived here for a visit after the first few days of her stay.

Berton House affects different writers in different ways. Anik mentioned that, while she arrived here with a very specific project in mind, she found that being here stimulated a whole bunch of other project pathways in a genre she calls "fictional essays." For Anik, Berton House was inspirational.

One morning I reached back four years to my last chat with Danielle Melcalfe-Chenail, who was in residence here nearly five years ago now, in the early winter of 2010. For Danielle, who had a very specific project in mind when she arrived, Berton House was a research base camp, from which she launched herself off to Haines Junction, Watson Lake, Inuvik, Whitehorse and Old Crow, searching archives and interviewing people for her history of Northern aviation.

She remembers one very cold early winter day when she built up a tremendous static charge in her snowsuit while walking over to the Dawson City Museum and inadvertently zapped the archive computer when she sat down to get to work.

Polar Winds: A Century of Flying in the North (Dundurn) got its Yukon debut in Whitehorse during the last week in September and sent her travelling again as she tours the book across the country.

As I much prefer doing face to face chats, I was delighted to be able to connect with her on Skype that morning. As part of our discussion she reflected on how doing the research for Polar Wind led directly to the "Yukon Love" column that she writes for What's Up Yukon. There were so many anecdotes about relationships that just wouldn't fit into a book about aviation history, so she was inspired to write this series of shorter, more personal pieces.

On that same day word arrived that Joan Thomas (Berton House, July-September, 2012) would have her third novel, The Opening Sky (McClelland & Stewart), on sale on the day I wrote the original draft of this column. This is the book she worked at during her residency here. She gave us a taste of the book during her community reading just over two years ago, but now it is finished and in bookstores. I'm looking forward to seeing a copy.

A version of this essay appeared in What's Up Yukon in early October.

What's the future of the Palace Grand?

While two seasons of Live at the Palace Grand performances have produced a total of 33 shows over the summer seasons and sold 2069 tickets, demonstrating that, even with inadequate lead time to promote the events it is possible to draw an audience, they could not have taken place at all without substantial government funding, and both seasons lost money for the Dawson City Arts Society (DCAS).

A public meeting was held on October 15 to examine the outcomes of the two years and try to find a way to continue the experiment.

Season one, in 2013, was spun out of the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in's Regional Economic Development Plan and financed with money from Can Nor. It was obvious that the money came too late for any type of promotion, so that summer's results were fairly impressive.

Season two was largely funded by Yukon's Economic Development plan and the Community Development Fund. While there was a bit more advance notice, funding still came easily eight months too late to be able to advertise for visitor traffic.

Over the two year period then, the shows earned 27% of the money they needed to have, and 73% of it came from contributions.

Statistics compiled indicate that year one cost $78,426,37 to produce the shows and that the Klondike Institute of Arts and Culture kicked in $3,193.28 to balance the budget. Year two cost less to produce - $71,856.93 - but the attendance was actually down (from an average of 70 per show down to 55) and KIAC had to contribute $6,012.54 to break even on the project.

As DCAS president Peter Menzies and Executive Director Karen Dubois informed the approximately 20 people at the meeting, KIAC can't afford to continue to subsidize any "Live" program at that rate.

If, 11 years later, this sounds depressingly like the discussion the Klondike Visitors Association spent several years having before it shut down the Gaslight Follies after the 2003 season, it's because it's exactly like it.

In spite of generous efforts by Parks Canada to improve the lighting and seating in the building, and a commitment to work on the sound quality for next summer, it's not at all certain at this point that there can be a third summer of Live at the Palace Grand.

Parks representatives at the meeting stressed that, even though having the PG be a living building is important to the Park's mandate, the agency is not equipped in terms of either staff or finance, to offer evening programming in the building.

KIAC reps stressed that the organization is stretched too thin to manage the program beyond what it has done, but indicated it would support any organization formed to take over that job. Such a group might be able to tap finding sources that KIAC/DCAS cannot touch.

The meeting proposed to create a non-profit association, tentatively called the Friends of the Palace Grand, to make plans and try to chart a future for the building and its operations. Six people - Debbie Winston, Teresa Conkin, Karen Dubois, Jim Taggart, Brian Stethem and Jenna Roebuck - signed up to form the new group and meet soon to get things rolling.

There was general discussion about the worth of the PG and agreement that the community generally supported the need to keep it alive and vital beyond the regular community events that do occur in there annually - Commissioner's Ball, several events sponsored by the KVA and the Dawson City Music Festival, high school graduation – as well as Park's regular summer fare, such as building tours and the popular Greatest Klondiker interactive presentation.

None of these add up to the potential of the building, which is what the variety of fare offered over the last two summers has been trying to do. Shows have included music concerts of various sorts, as well as vaudeville and stage presentations.

Two of the shows were partially home grown Klondike Home Companion productions, based loosely on the Prairie Home Companion model. Half of each show was local talent and the other half guest artists from out of town. There was a feeling that a more polished version of that type of thing might provide the combination of predictability and variety needed to make the show work for both local audiences and visitors.

While the meeting made a great deal of progress towards planning a future, it could not decide at that point how things might work out for 2015, so it is not certain whether some sort of "Live" event schedule may be organized.

Public review of recycling system changes

The Government of Yukon wants to hear from you on its plans to modernize recycling regulations in the territory. The proposed changes affect the Beverage Container Regulation and the Designated Materials Regulation.

The changes aim to increase the diversion of recyclable materials from our landfills and will better cover the costs of handling, processing and transporting these materials. You can provide comments online or by email, fax or mail.

The deadline for comments is November 21, 2014.

Summer Worker Survey produces some interesting results

Eighty percent of Dawson's seasonal workers are between the ages of 20 and 29 and only 33% of them are students. They come here for the jobs, which about two thirds of them have found before they came here, and slightly more than half of them plan to return to Dawson for at least one more year, while another one-third are still considering it.

These were some of the findings in the Klondike Development Organization's Summer Worker Survey, as presented at October's chamber of commerce meeting on October 15, by Across the River Consulting's Mark Wickham.

The KDO survey included 54 workers, who came here from all across Canada in a distribution that mirrors the Canadian population, as well as non-Canadians. Most of them worked in jobs that are seasonal and connected with the tourist industry. Sixty-five percent had been here before.

They begin to arrive in April, with a big bulge in May and a smaller number in June. Contrary to local legend they don't all scamper away in August, with the largest number leaving in September and some remaining into October.

By far the bulk of them learned about Dawson from family and friends with much, much smaller numbers using online or print job searches. Personal contacts are what caused most to them to look for work here, and an appreciation of the lifestyle and relationships are key factors in causing them to come back again.

Difficulty finding a place to live, and the cost of living here, are reasons given for not returning, but these are outweighed by a decision to settle down elsewhere or simply to go travelling.

Finding summer housing was only easy if the job came with accommodation, so an almost equal number found it difficult. One person lived in a delivery van all summer, while another had to move three times. Some lived in tenting arrangements, while others had family ties to count on. The breakdown was: staff housing – 40%; shacks & old cabins - 18%; house - 15%; apartment or suite - 13%; tent -13%; other - 1%.

The study determined that Dawson needs to recruit 40% of each summer contingent of summer workers (160 - 200 people) every year.

Word of mouth and personal contacts seem to be the most successful methods.

Summer workers are looking for a good experience as much as a good pay cheque.

The Dawson and Yukon labour markets are very tight, Wickham said, and Dawson needs to be more proactive in recruiting. If there were more reasons for people to be here in the off-season, then they would already be available for the summer labour pool when needed. The survey indicates that the region needs to become a "place" that will attract Generation Y in the same way that it used to attract Baby Boomers and Generation X.

Mark Wickham presented the Seasonal Worker Survey to the Dawson Chamber of Commerce.

New Lodge foundation takes shape

Foundation work for the facility that will replace the McDonald Lodge seniors residence got under way in September, but was not entirely finished before the snow arrived.

Canada and the Fixed Election Date

By Dan Davidson

When Mr. Harper's Conservatives first brought in the notion of a fixed election date I thought it seemed to be a pretty good idea. It would kill the endless inches of ink spent agonizing over when the writ was going to be dropped and end the practice of shortening the term of a government based on public opinion polls.

There were some problems that I did not foresee, though I should have.

A fixed election date only works when you have a majority government in power. Minorities can be defeated at any time and therefore fall outside the parameters of the legisla-

The Conservatives were the first party to break the new rule anyway. Rather than suffer the indignity of being defeated in a Parliamentary vote and face the (gasp) perfectly constitutional possibility of an Opposition coalition finishing out the term, Mr. Harper pulled the plug himself when it suited him.

This precedent is, of course, the reason why I keep seeing so many commentary pieces wondering whether he will in fact wait until the fixed date to drop the next writ. He's done it before - why wouldn't he do it again? That seems to be the logic.

If his party wasn't so far down in the polls right now, their might be some substance to that, but my own sense of things is that he will wait, hoping to shore up his standing over the next 12 months before he has to face the people again.

The issue is somewhat moot any way, because the original legislation didn't go far enough. It failed to say, "there shall be no direct campaign spending prior to the dropping of the writ."

I think banning it altogether would probably be impossible. Your Member of Parliament is, to some extent, campaigning every time he or she turns up at an event, of sends one of those free mailings to your post office box. So I'm taking about the massive, funded media stuff that shouldn't be allowed to launch until the last sprint.

In this decade we have entered the realm of the permanent election campaign. It starts the day after the most recent election and carries on forever. It is in the posters on public works projects, on the rebranding of long-standing government programs as if they were fresh new initiatives, in the perpetual re-announcing of programs and funds that have already been announced, the continuous photo-ops for international treaties that aren't even in their final form yet.

I realize I'm writing mostly about things that are being done by the party in power, but they are the ones that adopted this attack-ad/ branding mentality from the beginning of their current incarnation and have stuck to it tenaciously ever since.

This is certainly not to say that the other parties haven't stumbled onto the same perpetual motion political hamster wheel.

I'm not sure how the Liberals got my email address, but the last two weeks have been a veritable barrage of fund raising solicitations, seemingly based on the notion that if I donate to their war chest I win the chance to be in a draw to be selected for this political event of a lifetime. Quoting from one of today's emails:

"Today is your last chance to win the political experience of a lifetime. After you donate, share your big idea for Canada and enter to win: a return flight to Ottawa, breakfast with Justin Trudeau and one of his senior advisors (you bring the big idea!), and a chance to hear former U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton speak over lunch on October 6, 2014."

You enter by making a donation. The point is to help the Liberals match the size of the Conservative war chest. You can click through to their fund-raising counter or, in another email, compare the bar graphs of all three parties.

I kind of like Hilary, but I don't think hearing her speak has much to do with the Canadian condition.

I'm curious to see how Justin handles himself over the next year. The Ezra Levant slurs last month were really horrendous. A number of people felt that Trudeau's threat to cut off all communication with Sun network reporters was ill advised, but it seems to have garnered him the retraction and apology he was looking for, from the owners of the network if not from their attack dog, so apparently it worked.

The "breakfast with Justin" campaign seems to me to be focusing way too much on the leader of the party, just as the "stick with Harper" (or similar sentiments) campaign that keeps turning up on Facebook does. It's too presidential in nature. We don't elect our Prime Ministers, after all (the American public doesn't actually elect the President either, but that's a long story); we elect the man or woman who will be our Member of Parliament.

One hopes that this person will, in fact, be our representative in Ottawa rather than being Ottawa's apologist to the riding. It doesn't always work out that way, and when it doesn't we should let that person know how unhappy we are by showing him or her the door.

HUMANE SOCIETY DAWSON UPDATE

with Danielle Thorne, Humane Society Dawson

The Humane Society Dawson would like to say a HUGE Thank You to...

Milligan Sheet Metal Ltd. - Whitehorse

Thank you Milligan Sheet Metal Ltd. for the donation of a brand new oil tank for our animal shelter. Our cats and dogs are cozy and warm now, and we could not have done it without you!

A special thank you to Jim Vandusen for picking up the oil tank in Whitehorse, and delivering it right to the front door of our shelter!

Air North

This summer and autumn season, we were able to relocate 11 unwanted puppies from the area to Alberta and BC, where they received greater chances of finding forever homes. Thank you Air North for continuously ensuring the safe travels of our furry friends!

This column is provided by the Humane Dawson Society. Hours of operation: Monday, noon to 4 p.m., closed Tuesday, Wednesday to Saturday noon to 4 p.m. Phone number: 993-6900

Dempster Highway Snowmobile Use Advisory

You can now use your snowmobile along the Dempster Highway corridor from kilometre 68 to the Yukon-NWT border.

If weather conditions change, snowmobile closures may come into effect to protect the fragile ground cover from damage.

Use common sense to determine if you should travel across a landscape that might not be properly protected by snow cover. Hunters cannot harass or chase animals while on snowmobiles.

Help protect our environment.

Opportunities and challenges in Dawson's heritage buildings

Story & photos by Dan Davidson

In accounting terms, where do you put a historic property? Is it an asset or a liability?

The Klondike Development Organization's (KDO) latest forum was titled "Opportunities in our Heritage Buildings", but the first word might have easily been "challenges", as some of the presentations made clear.

The evening began with Greg Hakonson, who has masterminded two of the more successful repurposings of old buildings in Dawson. Under his guidance the Odd Fellows Hall was revived and put into service as the headquarters of the Klondike Institute of Art and Culture (KIAC). Programs there led directly to the transformation of the Old Liquor Store/YTG office building, so that when it was time to launch the Yukon School of Visual Arts (YSOVA). there was a place for it to be. Later it became the anchor for the long overdue construction of the Dawson campus for Yukon College.

Greg Hakonson's projects led to innovative changes.

As tricky as the actual construction challenge was, Hakonson told the assembled group of two dozen people that it had been even harder to sell the concepts that eventually gained the permissions and funding needed to do the two jobs. While the greater vision was to establish an arts college, the pitch had to sell that in terms of the economic benefits to the town and the territory.

Both KIAC and YSOVA have proven to be successful transformations and innovations, and finding good uses for formerly condemned buildings was icing on that cake.

Trina Buhler is a private contractor who is just in the final stages of completing three small houses on York Street, in behind the Palace Grand. All of the buildings were originally staff housing for the North American Transportation and Trading Company. Two had been pretty much abandoned and the third had actually burned down a few years ago. Buhler restored the two and rebuilt the third from photo references that she had access Trina Buhler has restored three small homes for sale.

Buhler intends to sell the finished products of her labour, but aside from the profit motive she says that she found pride in the accomplishment to be a very large part of what she was getting out of the project.

Parks Canada has a large stock of historic buildings in Dawson, and Superintendent David Rohatensky said that living up to the mandate - to preserve and present – is a formidable challenge. Some buildings are used for staff housing, some for Parks offices, some for storage, and some are basically facades for presentation purposes. A lot of them are in town itself but then there is the entire YCGC compound of Bear Creek, though some of the residences from that semi-independent company town are now in generating uses for some of its buildings, uses that would still have respect for heritage values, and tell the story, while also bringing in some

Current challenges include the Old Court House on Front Street, which turned out to have more problems attached to it than had been predicted once work started on it a few years ago. There are still things happening inside that building, though he admitted that would not be obvious from the exterior.

One of Parks' newer buildings is the reconstructed Palace Grand Theatre, which was built to replace the original building in the early 1960s, and is now old enough to be a heritage structure in itself. In trying to find ways to make more extensive use of the building upgrades are in the works on all its major systems. Last summer the railings on the second floor box seats were raised for safety purposes, and the sound system will get some attention in 2015.

The Yukon government has its own issues with major structures. One it has been trying to preserve and find a good use for is the Yukon Sawmill Company Office, which was declared a territorial site in 2005. Historic sites, said Barb Hogan, help to define a community's image, communicate that to visitors, and provide a link to the past. Maintaining them can help to enhance the skill levels of local trades people.

In the case of the sawmill some of the changes that need to be made inside to render it useful will change the nature of the building's interior. Some of the more basic infrastructure will eventually go into an addition, which has been built on the rear end of the original building.

Hogan indicated that the government is close to wanting to hear proposals for the building.

The City of Dawson doesn't have a lot of historic buildings, but the one it does have is right out there on Front Street and has been an object of discussion for years. It's coming up on two years since the town bought the Old CIBC Building for $170,000, and began to make plans to find the money to restore the look of the building as well as find a good use for

All sorts of potential uses have been suggested, said Mayor Wayne Potoroka, but the project is stalled at the clean-up level due to the presence of lead and asbestos all through the building, from top to bottom. Professional estimates for the mitigation of these hazardous materials say it could run as high as a quarter million dollars, and there's not much of anything else that can be done before that is down first. At this point the town can't install the new windows it had made for the building or even deal with the leaky roof that it certainly causing more damage the longer it remains unrepaired.

That Dawson's buildings present both opportunities and challenges is certainly clear from the reports at this KDO forum.

News & Happenings from the Community Library

In the Library this month

The Library will host a reading by Yukon author Eleanor Millard on Friday, November 14 at 7 p.m.

Now semi-retired, Eleanor has lived in the territory for nearly a half century, working as a social worker and adult educator. She is also holder of two Master's degrees, and is a former Yukon MLA and Education Minister. Eleanor worked for over 50 years in social and educational positions, and in consulting, mostly with First nations in small communities. She currently lives in Carcross.

Eleanor has published her memoirs and two books of fiction, including one based on experiences with her adopted daughter, who suffered from FASD. Admission to the reading is free and open to the public.

Eleanor will be available after the reading to discuss writing and publishing with anyone who is interested.

We're pleased to welcome the new Berton House Writer-in-Residence Tara Beagan to Dawson City. Of Ntlakapamux and Irish-Canadian descent, she will be at Berton House until mid-December, and is researching and planning a new work while here.

Tara completed nearly three years of service as Artistic Director at Native Earth Performing Arts in December 2013, and has been playwright-in-residence at the National Arts Centre, NEPA and Cahoots. Her plays have been produced by theatre companies across Canada. She is a Dora- and Betty-nominated actor and Dora-winning playwright, who has authored 20 plays, ranging from comedies to intense dramas. Tara also works as a workshop facilitator for youth, and as a mentor to emerging First Nations and non-First Nations playwrights.

She is joined in Dawson by her partner, theatrical designer Andy Moro, with whom she co-founded the indigenous arts activist company ARTICLE 11 in 2013.

Comprehensive palliative care reduces need for assisted suicide

By Harvey Max Chochinov and Balfour M. Mount Expert Advisors EvidenceNetwork.ca

WINNIPEG, MB and MON-TREAL, QC/ Troy Media/ - This week, the Supreme Court of Canada has been hearing an appeal by the BC Civil Liberties Association that could grant terminally-ill Canadians the right to assisted suicide. With this impending ruling and the passing of Bill 52 in Quebec (Medical Aid in Dying) and rumblings from parliament of another private members bill on assisted suicide, Canada is at a crossroads.

The Court faces a daunting task. The arguments they will hear are complex, diverse and impassioned, given our societal fear of death and the process leading to it. While some will try to reassure the court that many Canadians support physician hastened death, others will caution that popularity is hardly a trustworthy guide to constructive and just social policy reform. But first, the Court must consider whether their decision will improve care for the terminally ill.

Dying in Canada can be a scary prospect. According to a parliamentary report from 2000, most Canadians do not have access to comprehensive palliative care. Most will die in tertiary care settings due to inadequate community resources to support a home death. Furthermore, there are no national standards pertaining to pain control, symptom alleviation, psychosocial care and spiritual support. For First Nations, Metis or Inuit, receiving culturally sensitive palliative care is unlikely. Many patients in rural areas have little or no access to comprehensive palliative care.

The court must also consider who they would empower to carry out assisted suicide. By the time they reach licensure, many Canadian doctors have received less training in pain management than their counterparts in veterinary medicine. Most physicians have knowledge deficiencies that impair their ability to manage cancer pain and are poorly equipped to address end of life conversations. Other studies suggest that doctors who treat fewer terminally-ill patients and know the least about symptom management are most likely to be in favour of assisted suicide, while those with more experience tend to oppose it.

Autonomy can be a risky argument for legislative change. In some jurisdictions with death hastening legislation, euthanasia or assisted suicide has been provided to infants and children, people with dementia or chronic conditions, those who have not given explicit consent, the mentally ill and most recently, an inmate who preferred death to incarceration. Permissive legislation will also increase feelings of vulnerability amongst those with disabilities, those feeling a burden and those who society perceives as unproductive. Also, the more autonomy is granted, the more it becomes a perceived entitlement. In the Netherlands and Belgium, groups have been advocating for the availability of death hastening measures for people over 70 years of age who are expressing 'tiredness of life.

The design and representation of studies examining the outcome of death-hastening can sometimes be misleading or falsely reassuring. Take, for example, studies suggesting that families of patients who opt for euthanasia or assisted suicide do not experience negative psychological consequences. Currently, there are no studies examining the bereavement experiences of family members who were not informed of their loved ones' decision to pursue hastened dying. In Oregon, 10 per cent of patients refused to include their family in the discussion and in another 6 per cent of instances the physician did not know if families were aware of the request. Quebec's Bill 52 stipulates that patients can refuse to have their families consulted.

The Court may wonder if palliative care can include physician-hastened death. Palliative care demands vigilant monitoring of the patient and individual responses to assuage physical, psychosocial and spiritual distress. Palliative care is a process of caring applied over time. As such, short of asking dying patients to dislocate from communities that lack appropriate resources, most Canadians will simply have to make do - or, if the law changes, take cold comfort in knowing that they can access death-hastening alternatives.

Palliative care cannot eliminate every facet of end-of life suffering. Preserving dignity for patients at the end of life requires a steadfast commitment to non-abandonment, meticulous management of suffering and a tone of care marked by kindness. In response to this dignity conserving approach, the former head of the Hemlock Society conceded that "if most individuals with a terminal illness were treated this way, the incentive to end their lives would be greatly reduced."

That is a lot for the Supreme Court of Canada to consider. The country will anxiously await its verdict.

Harvey Max Chochinov is an expert advisor with EvidenceNetwork.ca and a Canada Research Chair in Palliative Care and Director, Manitoba Palliative Care Research Unit, Department of Psychiatry at the University of Manitoba. Balfour M. Mount is the Eric M. Flanders Professor Emeritus of Palliative Medicine at McGill University.

Examining the Space Between Here and There

Christina Battle's ODD Gallery exhibit will close at the end of the month, but there's still time to drop in and ponder this spare, yet interesting, take on the Yukon's landscape. Specifically, it deals with the view across the river from Dawson, the view that takes in the ice covered river and the snow clad hill and trees on the west bank.

in the two frames for a few rotations to appreciate what is being done here.

"Growing up in on the edge of the prairies I always get a little on edge when surrounded by mountains," says Battle in her artist's statement. "I find their scale and their threedimensionality perplexing. Against the big blue skies of the West they appear to be strangely flat, as if cutouts of paper carefully placed in order to obstruct my view. I long to and what catches the eye is the subtle shifts of light and dark on the river surface as it plays against the unchanging backdrop of the snowy hill.

As Meg Walker comments in her exhibit essay, "Questions for a Hillside" (see http://www.kiac. ca/oddgallery/exhibitions1/ to read the whole thing) "Like the artist, the lens-holders employed by Google don't quite know what to make of the Yukon view. Their software makes the landmass appear to bend

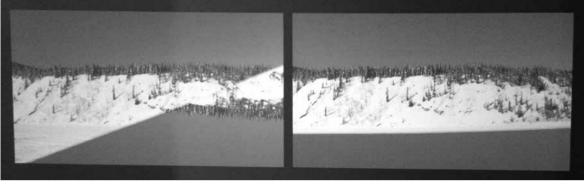

Image slices slip, flip and slide within the two frames.

Battle has filmed the view and then created a film loop in which she plays with the pieces of the scene as if they were parts of a puzzle, sliding them over and under and against each other and flipping them in a constantly changing series of patterns.

There are two frames to the video presentation, with sliding slices of the basic images doing different things on each one, only occasionally giving the viewer a glimpse of the original scene, just enough to appreciate what she is doing with it.

The visitor needs to be patient and watch the changes see past them."

"the space between here and there (the yukon river) is an attempt to play with this sense of flatness that I experience in the mountains, to decrease the distance between me (the camera) and them (in this case the foothills along the Yukon River surrounding Dawson City) and to transform them into an active visual space."

The other part of the display is also a video loop, borrowed from Google. This one is displayed on a flat screen rather than projected on the wall. This is also a winter scene, but the quality of light is very different away from shore, and the Yukon River's water curls in a shell-like formation never seen in threedimensional geography."

This video also requires that the visitor watch it for bit. The shifts in the view are slight and it takes a little time to see what is happening.

Battle shot her video and conceived this exhibit while an artist-in-residence for Klondike Institute for Art and Culture (KIAC) in March 2013. Originally from Edmonton, she currently lives on Denver, Colorado. She has exhibited internationally in festivals and galleries in North America and Europe.

Shadows play against the hillside.
