Uffish thoughts: A bomb scare in the Tower of London

By Dan Davidson

So far our one experience with a building evacuation due to an unidentified bag was sort of comical. It took place in one of the several towers that comprises the misnamed Tower of London.

It was October of 2008 and we were part of a United Kingdom bus tour finishing off our run with an open day in London before heading back to Canada. The Tower was one of three spots we thought we might try to take in, but it turned out there was so much to see there that it was all that we did that afternoon.

We were actually on the last bit of our ramble through the buildings, having already seen what we supposed were facsimiles of the Crown Jewels, paintings of the Royals going back generations, and lots of actual proof that there were CCTV cameras everywhere. They'd put up metallic view plates in some spots so that you could see you were being watched. Heavens to George Orwell, I remember thinking.

Somewhere along the way we'd been joined by a school group of teenagers on a field trip, all neatly dressed in school uniforms and sort of semi under the control of their teachers as they and we worked our way up the levels of one of the larger towers. This one was stuffed with armor-plated halfmannequins of men and models of horses, massive displays of all sorts of medieval weaponry, tapestries, and all manner of

The kids were paying more attention to their cell phones than to anything around them and we recently retired teachers were discussing whether allowing them to do that was something we would have put up with (as cameras, ves; for voice or texting, no just in case you're wondering what sort of dinosaur I am) when some official looking people started herding them together and moving them down the stairs. No one called out or approached us; it was all very orderly.

We moved on, happy to see them leaving and thinking it was odd that the door to the next level was now closed, but not really thinking there might be a reason for it. There was, as we discovered when we encountered the guard at the top of the stairs, who wondered sternly why we weren't going down with everyone else and hadn't the closed door meant anything to us.

Well, no, I replied. No one had spoken to us and we had thought the round-up was just for the school kids, that perhaps one or more of them had done something wrong and wrecked the outing for them all. As for the door, it hadn't been locked.

The guard nodded and perhaps took note of our Canadian accents, explaining that this was actually a building evacuation because an unattended knapsack had been found on the premises, on one of the lower floors.

I thought, "school kids dropped knapsacks –what else

So down the stairs we went, meekly participating in our first, and so far only, building evacuation in the face of perceived bomb threat. Earthquakes, propane leaks, and one or two real fire alarms in hotels, yes, but this was new.

seen bombs and I had not.

The way out led through the gift shop, on the sub level of the tower and, oddly enough, once we were all down there no one seemed in any particular rush to shoo us all the rest of the way out of the building.

Was the gift shop specially reinforced against having the rest of the massive stone building fall down on it? Or, more likely, had they opened the bag, found some kid's school books, and called it all off? We never did find out, but it was a memorable experience all the same.

(This column was inspired by the recent bomb scare evacuation at the federal building in Whitehorse.)

Obituary:

Lorna (Brownie) Foth

December 9, 1929 - January 25, 2015

Mom was born Lorna Mae Brown, the younger daughter to Bill and Lillian Brown in the rural community of Stanbridge East, Quebec just south of Montreal in the Eastern Townships. She grew up surrounded by aunts, uncles, cousins and her beloved grandparents Ninny and Adelbert Phelps.

She regaled us with many stories of time spent on her grandparents farm and memories of gathering pails of Maple sap from the Maple Sugar Grove with her Uncles Joe and Art Phelps using teams of draft horses and delivering it to the Sugar shack where it was boiled down over a hot wood fire eventually becoming Maple Syrup. Of course the best part was dropping the hot syrup in the snow and winding it around a stick and eating it like toffee.

After high school, following in her sister Marjorie's footsteps, she did her nurses training at the Salvation Army Hospital, Catharine Booth Hospital, in Montreal. (It was there she got the nickname "Brownie" a name by which she is fondly known to most of her friends). Following graduation in 1950 mom travelled west to work at the Grace Hospital in Vancouver, BC.

Hearing that they were in need of Maternity nurses experienced in delivering babies in Dawson City, Yukon, Mom put her homesickness aside and travelled north to work at St. Mary's Hospital. Soon after arriving in Dawson City she met her husband-to-be, Peter Foth, who at that time worked for the Yukon Consolidated Gold Corporation on the large gold dredges and in the Gold Room at Bear Creek (where the gold was sorted and melted into bricks).

They travelled back to Quebec to be married in Mom's home church, St. James the Apostle Anglican Church in Stanbridge East, Quebec in 1952. 2 daughters followed, Lynne, born in 1954 and Debbie, in 1955.

After the closure of YCGC dad joined Canada Customs in 1964 and the family moved to Whitehorse briefly, Beaver Creek for 4 years and then back to Dawson City where Mom worked in Social Welfare until she retired in 1977. In 1980 Mom and Dad retired to White Rock ,BC where they enjoyed the mild climate and having their daughters and families visit. They built a log cabin on their Bonanza Creek claim, to which they returned to spend many happy summers. Dad passed away in 2006, also grandson Karl Algotsson. Mom moved to Kamloops Seniors Village in September 2014 to be nearer to family. Though short we had many good times and even celebrated 5 birthdays together, including hers and son-in-law John's on Dec. 9. 2015.

Mom passed away peacefully in her sleep January 25, 2015. She is survived by 2 daughters, Lynne (John) Taylor, Debbie Algotsson, Hans Algotsson, grandsons Anders Algotsson, David Algotsson, Cameron Taylor (Danika Maartman), Keri Taylor, Chris (Danielle) Taylor, great grandchildren Charlee & Gavin Taylor and many nieces, nephews, cousins and extended family and friends especially in BC, Yukon, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Quebec and across Canada.

Multi-skilled Hard worker seeks employment

Basically, that's it. I am a multi-skilled man looking for an interesting job. I realize that most positions available are not advertised, so I'm advertising myself in hopes of finding a job that is more of a lifestyle. I'm originally from Newfoundland, although I haven't been back there in about 17 years because I've been busy exploring wherever my feet land me. Growing up on the ol' Rock I was always working. I had many different jobs growing up and to be quite honest, was a loudmouth, troublemaker who never listened to anyone but myself and got into heaps of trouble. I dropped out of school in my teenage years and then went on to live and work in Halifax, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary, Vancouver, before I finally completed my GED and returned to Newfoundland to attend Memorial University. I know I attended, but learned absolutely nothing (at that time I still knew everything apparently). I ended up jumping on a plane and moving to Europe for about three years, spending my time working between Haarlem Netherlands, Gullion Switzerland, and all over Serbia, and everywhere in between. While over there I worked many different jobs as I was without a work permit. From small construction jobs, to harvesting flowers, harvesting grapes, herding cows, to setting up raves and events. I once even helped design a fashion show that took place in Amsterdam harbor including a barge, a lighthouse boat, and a submarine. I built an 18-meter high wedding cake for a champagne ad and was constantly busy. Eventually the relationship I was in ended and I flew back to Canada where I found myself in Newfoundland's second Capitol, Fort McMurray. Over the next decade or so I tried to find my place. From building Ice roads north of McMurray in the bush, to running a steam truck and pressure testing wells. I spent a winter surveying for an insane road building company. I spent a summer in the Mountains of B.C and Alberta on a Heli-Portable Drilling crew, and a few winters drilling with a Bombi rig. I ended up with 10 guys working for my painting company, which I fell into pretty much by accident. One thing about running a company is that you have to like what you are doing. If I never see a 5-gallon pail of paint as long as I live, I would be a happy man, and dance a jig or three. A lot of projects were completed and there were many satisfied costumers. Eventually I took on a large job for a disaster of a company and it proved to be my downfall. If you don't try, you don't fail, and you don't learn I guess. Although those self-affirming quotes usually make me want to strangle whoever is spewing them, it's one of the truer ones. Then two years ago I was lucky enough to land a job as maintenance man in the Pit in Dawson city and that began my love affair with the Yukon. I worked there for a very short period of time, 4 hours a day for a decent wage and a free bed. The owner wasn't surprised that I left, and we remain friends to this day. Thank you again sir, it was the best life moves I ever made. The mining bug came my way and I headed up to the hills to find gold. Last year I mined as well but right now I'm putting myself out there in hopes of finding an interesting job. Here's the good and the bad condensed version of myself.

The Bad: I am a fairly blunt person and have been told that I have an abrasive personality, which I can see. Years on the road and in the oil patch have sunk into my bones I guess. I like drinking beer and I do smoke pot but am not a 'sit around looking for my own ass' pothead or chronic drunk, although the first few days out of the bush are usually hard on the ol' liver.

The good: I grew up working hard and have an excellent work ethic. I've worked some pretty dangerous jobs and still have all my digits. I have safety ingrained in me. I've got a great sense of humor but I am not a clown. I'm open to learning new skills of all types, especially anything hands on. I have operated loaders, excavators, and rock trucks, class 1 gravel trucks (although I don't have my class 1) and am open to learning to operate any and all pieces of iron. I work well alone in remote areas and have no problem solving on the spot solutions to weird and unexpected issues. I don't make excuses and am responsible. I have too many odd skills to mention here.

I'm open to any offers, any kind of job, and really couldn't care less about what the pay is. I would rather make less money and be happy, than be rich and miserable. More remote work is preferred. If you find any of my rambling interesting please feel free to give me a call or text @ Al 867-333-1034 and have a chat.

McDiarmid claims to have been targeted two years before he was shot

By Dan Davidson

While Mark McDiarmid is on trial in Dawson facing seven charges against him for actions taken by on October 19 and 20, 2011. McDiarmid, who is representing himself in this action, clearly sees that it is the system which is on trial, and that he is a man who has been schemed against, falsely accused and subjected to trial by a system prepared to fabricate much of the evidence introduced against him.

On February 24, 2015, he took the stand to begin his own narrative of the events on October 19 and 20. His version was vastly different in terms of locations, personnel involved and the relative timing of events.

Perhaps the biggest initial difference was that he began his story with events that occurred in 2008-2009, when he was, for reasons related to his occupational skillset in explosives and construction, shortlisted as a person who might have been involved in some sort of criminal/disruptive event in either Alberta, where he had been working at the time, or in Northern British Columbia.

He became aware of this after taking a call from an RCMP officer from Fort St. John and realizing that his responses to certain questions had triggered the force to put him under surveillance, using what he understands to be their community policing program.

He gained his understanding of this program by talking with an investigator who first enlightened him to the techniques of community based surveillance, by which the force would encourage citizens to spy on each other in the name of crime prevention. He was also told how the authorities would routinely alter digital video and audio recordings and disseminate false information about people who were on their lists.

He believes the agent who told him all this was Bob Paulson, the current Commissioner of the RCMP who served, at one point in his career, in various parts of BC. (By 2008 Paulson was Assistant Commissioner and transferred to Ottawa.)

He attributes his reduced circumstances, personal harassment by some citizens of Dawson, the downgrading of his drivers' licence and other acts to being part of an ongoing campaign against him.

"My ability to work was taken away," he said, by which he was referring to his ability to work in the oil patch in Alberta.

When Crown Prosecutor David McWhinnie questioned the relevance of this line of narrative to the actual charges, McDiarmid snapped back, "You guys have spent a million dollars on this prosecution. You should understand why."

While living in the Klondike, mostly at a trailer on his woodlot, but sometimes at his mother's house and sometimes with some other people, he became convinced that the local RCMP, and especially Sgt. Dave Wallace, were well aware of the plot against him and that they refused to help him.

"Dave Wallace just wanted to see me convicted," he said, in regards to numerous unspecified charges that he said would have added up to 17 years worth of jail time should he have been tried and convicted for them.

"Wallace knew I was being set up."

Meanwhile he testified he was being escorted in and out of town, bullied by some business owners, blinded at night (his eyes are sensitive) by bright headlights approaching and following him. His mother's house had been entered of various occasions, as had his trailer. Once when he was in jail for 9 days, his truck was vandalized and his camper broken into.

By October 2011 there was talk of having McDiarmid placed on a Peace Bond, an alternative to jail, which he viewed as a trap.

McDiarmid's version of the events of Oct. 19 is that Wallace confronted him and spoke to him on Second Avenue in Dawson where he was delivering wood. McDiarmid escaped, but was followed to his mother's house on Boutillier Road

"I was trapped," he said. "I had no where to go. I said to myself, 'if they're gonna do this, I'm gonna take his vehicle apart."

Using a sledgehammer he smashed the driver's side headlight, dented the fender and smashed the windshield in front of the startled officer, intending to go round the truck and smash all its windows. Wallace backed up and McDiarmid was able to drive away.

In his version of the story, if anyone had come to him at MacKenzie Petroleum, where he stopped to gas up his truck, he would probably have surrendered, but no one did, so he went out to his woodlot intending to fix his access road and cut as much timber as possible so that members of his family would have that to sell once he was imprisoned.

While out there on Oct. 20 he saw a white plane circle his area, and has always assumed this was the RCMP looking for him. As it grew dark he saw lights at the Tintina Trench Rest Stop, many kilometres distant, and thought that was also surveillance.

When he ran out of gravel for the work he was doing he decided to go get more, using the oil and gas filled bottles he had been taught to use as thawing tools. On the way out of the North Fork Road he became aware he was being followed and actually saw one RCMP SUV waiting for him.

He saw the spike belt, which another pair of officers had spread across the road further on, and was unable to avoid it. As he felt his tires settle on the rims he pulled over and stopped.

His account of what happened next is extensive, and it took him some time after the events to piece it all together, largely due, he said to the hydrostatic or hydraulic shock effects of being shot. These things, combined with blood loss and a lack of proper medication and poor sleep for six weeks after that date, left him confused and suffering memory loss.

Justice Elizabeth Hughes instructed the jury that the accused was no medical expert and that this part of his narrative was inadmissible as evidence.

In his version of events, different officers are paired up in different vehicles than the ones they have testified to have been in. While he admitted throwing a bottle at one of the SUVs he omitted mention of hitting the window. While he admitted planning to do some damage to the vehicles, such as he had done to Wallace's truck, he omitted all mention of the splitting maul and insisted he was unarmed when he was shot by Constables Dave Marentette and Jordan McIntyre.

There were numerous digressions in this testimony and he was often stopped and brought back to the line of the narrative by the Justice.

"Every time you interrupt me I lose track of where I am," he complained.

He said he had hoped to lure those two officers into the bush, attack them one by one, and do them some injury in return for things they had done to him or had not done for him.

"I wanted them to feel helpless," he said.

He said he was shot first in the shoulder, then in the upper thigh and finally, when he was trying to heave himself back to his feet, in the leg.

He said the officers lied to their detachment commander, Wallace, when he arrived after it was all done, and told him they had been attacked with the splitting maul, which was, by then, in evidence.

His description of the vehicle angles and locations varies from the diagrams and photographs already shown, but he has been constant in saying that most of the visual evidence was staged and shot later to fit the story.

He said he expected to die out there, and believes that what saved him was the arrival of a fuel truck from the Golden Predator Minesite, which came along before Wallace arrived. He said he believes his life was saved by the arrival of the fuel truck, which was eased on by on the road. Suddenly there were witnesses, though no such truck or driver has ever been found.

After all, he said, "Dead men tell no tales."

Consistent throughout his narrative of that night are references to Constable Justin Smith, whom everyone else has testified was not there. Smith's was the one kind face he says he saw.

"I feel bad about bringing him into this proceeding because he did nothing but help me."

McDiarmid's memory challenged in cross-examination

By Dan Davidson

Mark McDiarmid concluded his personal testimony on the morning of February 25, spending most of the first part of the morning doing what he often referred to as "clarifying" comments he had made the day before. This posed some difficulty for him, as he tended to add interpretations and speculations to things he had said.

He began by saying that he had found it hard to look at the gallery (which has grown during his testimony) because he kept seeing people's eyes watering and that made his eyes want to water. He hoped no one would think he had intended to be rude by not looking at them.

Justice Elizabeth Hughes allowed that personal aside but for the rest of the time was strict with instructions as to what he could and could not comment on.

"Do not speculate or guess," she told him on numerous occasions. "Just tell what you saw and heard."

At other times she instructed him not to "mix evidence with the final argument"

Noting a tendency to reiterate previous comments, she told him a number of times not to repeat things, that the jury had heard him the first time, and so had she.

When he tried to explain how he had eventually come to know the voice of Constable Justin Smith, she said, "You can talk about what you heard on the 20th, not about comparing audio sounds later."

He wanted to show a picture from the airport of the airplane that he said he saw circling his position that day, but Hughes said there was no way to prove that was the plane, or even that a plane had flown in that direction for any reason, so she refused that request.

Regarding the lights he saw on the Tintina Trench the Justice said that he could say he saw lights, but really could not make assumptions as to what or who they were.

Getting back to filling out some of his testimony from yesterday, McDiarmid said that he threw the oil and gas filled bottle to land in the road in front of the approaching RCMP SUV, just to get them to slow down, but it didn't work.

He continued to insist that while he intended to damage the vehicles somehow, he was unarmed when he was shot.

He insisted that there was no serious attempt at first aid by the officers who were first present after they shot him.

Hughes prevented him from retelling the entire story about how the passage of the fuel truck probably saved his life, but he added to that narrative by saying. "I thought I'd die until Wallace arrived."

Since much of his testimony has revealed nothing but contempt, anger and disappointment for Sergeant Dave Wallace, this was an odd change of reaction.

McDiarmid's memory challenged

He went on to talk about the assault on Wallace's truck on the 19th, saying he chose to take out his anger and frustration on the vehicle so that there wouldn't be an actual physical "altercation" with the man himself.

He continued to insist that Constable Justin Smith was present at the scene and actually interceded with another officer at one point about his treatment after the shooting. He also insisted that that the Murtagh video shows the presence of Constable Ryan Hack in a fabricated reenactment of the night time events, though Hack has already testified that the man in the video is Constable Jeff Nielsen.

McDiarmid wanted to show the jury the entry and exit wounds on his body, but Justice Hughes said that these had been described in sufficient detail by him and a number of other people, and that this wasn't necessary.

He concluded by saying that he didn't have to testify in this case, but that he wanted to in order to get his story on the record.

Crown Prosecutor David McWhinnie began his crossexamination of McDiarmid after a brief adjournment in the proceedings.

McWhinnie began with questions about the sledgehammer with which the prisoner had attacked Wallace's truck, suggesting that he had damaged the truck in a fit of anger and was not as in control as his testimony would have people believe.

Eliciting from McDiarmid that he always wired and wrapped his heavy tools near their handles to prevent the heads from breaking the handles on a missed swing, he noted that this sledge was not wrapped and that it could have broken and gone through the window, striking the sergeant.

McDiarmid suddenly realized that this was not one of his wrapped tools, but one which he had possession of at that time in order to reinforce it for another citizen.

Attempting to trace the history of animosity between McDiarmid and Wallace, McWhinnie used the previous testimony of the sergeant and some other witnesses to indicate that Wallace was generally polite around the defendant.

There were, in fact, occasions when McDiarmid had said he preferred to deal with Wallace rather than some of the other members, notably Constables Jeff Nielsen and David Marentette. He had serious issues with those members over their alleged mistreatment of his mother.

McDiarmid replied that in such situations, Wallace was "the lesser of two evils."

McWhinnie suggested to the witness that his problems with Wallace were not so much over things the officer had done as things that he had not done. McDiarmid did not disagree.

After he was out on bail for unrelated matters, two people who had given him surety on his release withdrew. In the first case McDiarmid did spend nine days in custody in Whitehorse while his new arrangements were made. It was then that his truck and trailer were damaged. In both cases he said he had actually told the men offering him surety that they should withdraw as he expected to be arrested and did not want them to lose any money.

McWhinnie suggested that by October 19 he was aware that the RCMP were looking to take him into custody and he was essentially staying out of sight, but took the chance to come into town to deliver some wood to a customer.

"You knew Wallace would have to arrest you," he said.

"I didn't think he would be that dumb to try it," McDiarmid replied.

McWhinnie spent much of his cross-examination trying to establish that the defendant's memory was not to be trusted on many details, some of which varied between his statements to ASIRT, his statements at the preliminary hearing, and the statements he had made in this court

"Were you messed up after being shot?" he asked, referring to statements that the accused's memory of the events of that night took some weeks to come clear due to blood loss, various traumas, inadequate medication and lack of sleep.

"It didn't come back until December 7 when I started sleeping (better)," McDiarmid replied.

McWhinnie went onto suggest that much of what McDiarmid has testified to recalling is based on things that he has learned about the events from others, and that his accounts have shifted as he has adjusted his narrative to fit new facts when they became available.

As the afternoon came to an early close and the jury was dismissed around 3:45, it appeared that the last witnesses had been heard and that the trial may move onto closing arguments this week.

McDiarmid accuses the authorities of framing him, calls them "parasites"

By Dan Davidson

After Mark McDiarmid requested additional time to prepare for his closing argument, the February 27 session of court was put off until 2 p.m. on Friday afternoon. This trial has not been meeting on Friday afternoons, so this was a marked change of timing.

Justice Elizabeth Hughes began the session by admonishing McDiarmid over his tendency to editorialize and wander off topic. She would not allow matters that had not already been put before the jury to be discussed. He was to summarize and respond only. She did, however, allow him some opening remarks.

He told the jury that he was not really ready for this, but that it was likely he never would be. In order to have the time and peace and quiet to work on his case while at the Whitehorse Correctional Centre, he said he had resorted to deliberately choosing to be put into segregation for 14 months, assaulting two other inmates so that he would be left alone to plan his defense.

On another occasion, dissatisfied with his court appointed amicus, he assaulted that person as well so that he could take over dealing with his own case.

"I did this right in front of an officer, on purpose."

On the other hand, he said, segregation, a 5½ month hunger strike, the type of lights at the WCC, and the stress of the last 40 months have taken their toll on him.

"I'm not my normal self," he said.

He also indicated that he was not in his normal state of mind on October 19, after what he has testified earlier was two years of continuous harassment by the police and certain members of the public that were participating in what he claims to be the real face of "community policing".

"I was done, after two years of being tormented and charged."

On October 19 he had two encounters with Sgt. Dave Wallace. His account of the first one, which Wallace does not remember in the same sort of detail, is supported by the testimony of the person to whom he was delivering wood at the time on Second Avenue, though it is at variance with his testimony to the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team.

He evaded Wallace at that time, but when Wallace later boxed him in at his mother's home on the other side of town, he felt trapped and took out his frustration on the Sergeant's truck, smashing a headlight and windshield and denting a fender, thus enabling himself to drive away from that scene.

He says he never intended to hurt Wallace, just scare him and make him feel helpless.

Of the confrontation when he was shot three times the next day on the Dempster Highway, he first maintains that this actually took place at the Junction of the Dempster and North Fork Road, and that all the evidence saying otherwise has been constructed to fit the story the RCMP decided to tell about the event.

He believes his woodlot was scouted by an airplane during daylight hours on Oct. 20 and that spotters looking from the Tintina Trench Rest Stop were searching for him when it got darker. His accounts of the positioning of the officers, the teams that they were working in, who did what and when, are considerably at variance with the official RCMP story.

After he was followed out the North Fork Road and hit the spike belt which had been laid by the occupants of RCMP SUV 10 Alpha 2, he says he pulled over at the intersection and intended to disable the vehicle following him and lure the officers, whom he thought would be Constables Dave Marentette and Jeff Nielsen, into the bush where he could deal with them one by one. He admitted to having serious issues with this pair after more that one previous altercation.

"I wasn't thinking rationally at all," he said. "My intent was to deal with Nielsen and Marentette."

He says he threw an oil and gas filled bottle in front of their SUV to make them stop. They say the bottle broke on the window, smearing it with oil.

Though he has told ASIRT that he approached the SUV with an axe (actually a splitting maul) in hand, something both officers say was the case, he now says he was empty handed when he was shot.

He takes serious issue with the Crown's continued reference to his thawing bottles as Molotov Cocktails. They cannot explode, he says; they merely ignite and burn to thaw frozen gravel.

"(They) won't stay lit if they're sealed," he said.

He says he was shot by Constables Dave Marentette and Jordan McIntyre, after at least three unannounced warning shots went by his head.
McIntyre shot him the last time after he was already disabled and merely trying to get to his feet after having been shot in the thigh.

McDiarmid says that he believes they would have let him bleed out and die on the road except for two things. First, a fuel truck came by on the North Fork, heading back to Dawson from the Golden Predator mining operation, and saw the events taking place, although he's not sure they saw him.

Second, Wallace arrived on the scene after having scouted him from the Tintina Trench, and the detachment commander's arrival saved his life. Wallace had not witnessed the actual events and believed the lie that the other officers told him

After that, McDiarmid says, the local RCMP members, the Major Crimes Unit officers and the ASIRT team colluded to create the evidence that the Crown has spent several weeks presenting, including placing evidence at the scene, staging photographs, altering the contents of pistol magazines and digitally editing both of the two videos as well as the audio records of the event.

Wallace's part in this is uncertain in his testimony. McDiarmid says that he believes the sergeant never saw the original of the VICS video before it was altered.

McDiarmid contends that most of the seven charges against him are false and that his offences on October 19, when he damaged the truck, are the only ones he should be tried on.

"My own evidence will probably find me guilty of some charges," he said.

Aside from clearing his name of some offences, one of his major objectives is, he said, to expose the injustice and illegal practices of the authorities, which he referred to many times as "parasites".

He complained that several of the witnesses he had wanted to call had been induced to withdraw their testimony or had altered what they had been going to say.

"The RCMP should not," he concluded, "be rewarded with convictions for dong something illegal."

McDiarmid's closing arguments ran well past the allotted 90 minutes to around two hours, leaving too little time in the day to give the jury a much needed break and still have time to hear the Crown's presentation. As a result, the Crown's final argument was postponed until Monday, with Justice Hughes scheduled to spend what she estimates will be at least a couple of hours giving her charge to jury.

Have you got a cold weather story you'd like to share? Send it to the Sun. We'd love to hear from you.

McDiarmid found guilty on five of seven charges, not guilty of attempted murder

By Dan Davidson

The Mark McDiarmid Trial in the Supreme Court of Yukon concluded Monday evening with the accused found guilty on five of the seven indictments (three assaults, mischief and weapons possession) and not guilty on the two more serious charges of attempted murder. The jury brought a unanimous verdict back to the courtroom at 7:30 in the evening after deliberating on the case since shortly after 3:30 that afternoon.

The day had begun at 9:30 with the final argument of the Crown, presented by Crown Prosecutor Jennifer Grandy in about 45 minutes.

She encapsulated the testimonies presented by the RCMP officers present at the events of October 19 and 20, 2011 and asked the jury to see these as consistent as testimony from people who saw the events from a variety of distances and perspectives was likely to be, varying in some small details but not in the overall arc of the story.

She said that an exact correspondence of experience would have been unrealistic and suspect under the circumstances.

"They are reliable, credible (witnesses) who corroborate each other."

By contrast she found the testimony of Mark McDiarmid to be "evasive and argumentative" and that his memories of the events were "unclear and shifting", full of "speculation" and the product of an unreliable memory.

She pointed in particular to his continued insistence that Constable Justin Smith was present on Oct. 20, while everyone else agreed he was not, and on his refusal to believe that Const. Jeff Nielsen was one of the officers who shot him, in spite of Nielsen's testimony that he was.

She dismissed his theories about video and crime scene tampering, the former with reference to the testimony of the cyber-crime forensic analyst who examined the DVD evidence declared it free of any alteration.

The three recovered casings at the scene corresponded to those test fired from the two distinct weapons of Constables Jeff Nielsen and David Marentette, and the one recovered bullet came from Nielsen's Sig Sauer pistol.

McDiarmid objected that the bullet that was analyzed was not the bullet that had been recovered at the scene, but Justice Hughes indicated that he had not been able to get the forensic expect to agree to that theory during his testimony.

Sergeant David Wallace's account of the events of October 19 overlapped the account given by McDiarmid himself, differing in some details, but telling essentially the same story, in Grandy's opinion.

In the Crown's case, McDiarmid was shot because he managed to frighten the officers into believing he was going to hit them with the splitting maul he was holding as he ran towards them. He has testified that he did bear ill will towards these two officers and wanted to hurt them.

Faced with an approximately metre long weapon coming at them, they fired when he was about two and a half metres from them.

Following Grandy's summation, Justice Elizabeth Hughes called a brief recess and then began her charge to the jury, which took up the rest of the morning and, with a short lunch break, much of the afternoon.

She reminded the jury of their duties and that they now had possession of all the evidence that existed. While McDiarmid had presented them with a vast array of speculation and theory, they could only credit that which they felt he had proven with evidence.

She then worked her way through all seven charges, going over the evidence in sometimes heavily repetitive detail, as the three assault charges and two attempted murder charges required exactly the same explanations and cautions. She apologized for that at least once.

For the charge of mischief in the damaging of the RCMP truck, 10 Alpha 3, there was no doubt that the damage had been done and McDiarmid had admitted to it. During her instruction he objected that Sgt. Wallace had not been engaged in a lawful act when he came to request that McDiarmid return to the detachment to deal with the bail breech warrant, but Hughes instructed him not to interrupt her.

The attempted murder charges involved details and cautions that were similar to each other. Hughes cautioned that the jury had to decide if he intended to kill or just to damage the officers and their vehicle, since he had stated that he wanted to damage a vehicle for each time that he had been persecuted by the RCMP.

During the discussion of the Nielsen charges McDiarmid objected that this officer wasn't even present on October 20 and any claim otherwise was part of the conspiracy on which he based his defense.

Once again Hughes instructed him to be quiet, and went on with her instructions.

Assault charges, she said, had to take into account the use of force to hurt or intimidate someone. It needed to be clear that the assailant was willing and able to carry out the threat. Damaging the truck with the sledgehammer was not necessarily the same as assaulting Wallace, unless the officer truly believed, as he had testified, that his person was in danger of injury.

Similarly, the assault charges involving Marentette and Nielsen hinged on their perception, and the evidence given by both Wallace and Constable McIntyre, that the accused had advanced on the pair of them with the splitting maul hefted in a manner like a person who is about to chop down with it.

At each point along the way she reminded the jury of McDiarmid's theory that any evidence presented by Sgt. Wallace, Corporal Morin, or Constables Nielsen, McIntyre and Marentette was suspect because he believed it to be part of a frame-up, which had been constructed to falsify all manner of physical and digital evidence against him.

The final charge, possession of a weapon for the purpose of harming someone, had a somewhat different list of instructions. It did include the caution that a splitting maul is not generally constructed to be a weapon, but that it can become one depending on the intent of the wielder. At various points over the last week McDiarmid claimed to have been shot while weaponless, but in the end he did not object when the Crown and the Justice said he was holding it.

As such, said the Justice, it could be used to "injure, threaten, kill or intimidate" another person, and so could be classified as a weapon, one which he did not put down when told to.

Following these instructions the fourteen person jury was reduced to twelve by a drawing of lots, which misfired and had to be done over when the court clerk's sleeve accidently whisked a third card out of the drum the first time around.

Following the reading of the verdicts, McDiarmid made it quite clear to everyone listening that he would be organizing an appeal, and that he could not understand how the jury could have failed to comprehend the evidence of the conspiracy that he had placed before them as early as his cross-examination of the Crown's witnesses several weeks earlier.

Discussion among the defense, prosecution and Hughes revealed that it will be some weeks before sentencing can be handed down. There have first to be a Gladue Report (a type of pre-sentencing and bail hearing report that a Canadian court can request when considering sentencing an offender of Aboriginal background), a pre-sentence report and possibly victim impact statements. Hughes indicated that she will be recommending a psychological evaluation of the defendant.

It is expected that it will be March 17 before the status of organizing these reports can be affirmed. McDiarmid actually had been expected to appear in another case related to some events in Whitehorse on Tuesday at 1:30, but that hearing will now take place on March 17 as well.

5 year old Maya completes the "Wintery Woods Scavenger Hunt"

A trail system gets a makeover

Twenty-five folks decked out in ski gear celebrated KATTS Grand Opening of a new Trailhead Kiosk and Warming Hut at Moose Mountain Cross Country Ski Trails on the 21st.

Most know KATTS, Klondike Active Transport and Trails Society, as the organization that built the popular 9th Avenue Trail. But this was merely the catalyst that continues to drive a passion for promoting and building trails in the Klondike.

KATTS recently embraced the notion of promoting and developing winter trails. Where winter cloaks the Klondike for half the year why not celebrate it through healthy, outdoor activities and adventure. It made sense to start with the existing Moose Mountain Ski Trails. Thanks to an 'Access and Activity' grant from MEC the trails now boast a trailhead kiosk with map and a cozy warming hut less than 1 km into a groomed trail system. Further brushing by youth crews last fall, and a volunteer program of grooming and tracksetting provides a series of loops totalling 8 kilometres of skiable terrain.

In true Dawson fashion the community stepped up. The fireguard crew ensured that cut brush was removed from the trails, Ground Truth delivered firewood, Strong like Horse built a ski rack and the Sled Dawgs assisted with grooming and tracksetting.

Involving youth is key. An arrangement between TH Heritage Department and the Robert Service School Tech Ed class had youth acquiring carpentry skills building the walls of the warming hut which were later assembled onsite. A genuine partnership and community involvement works its magic again!

An opening that started with a "Wintery Woods Scavenger Hunt" led little ones to the cabin. KATTS envisions more events like this on the trails in years to come. School classes, and ski lessons through RPAY's 'Winter Active for Life'

Dawson wants the WWTP in working order before it takes it over

By Dan Davidson

February 19, 2015 was the date set for YTG Highways and Public Works to begin to determine if Corix will be granted the 3 months successful acceptance testing period as stipulated in their design/build contract for the Dawson City Wastewater Treatment Plant (WWTP), which has not managed to meet the requirements of Dawson's Water Licence since it went into service in the summer of 2012.

Norm Carlson, Dawson's Super of Public Works is concerned that it may have passed those tests. Indeed, both Carlson and the members of Dawson's council expressed this concern at the February 24 council meeting.

As has been noted at meetings and in reports before now, Dawson routinely passed its test requirements in the winter when it had nothing more than primary treatment (screening) in hand, and so far the new plant has been unable to equal that record.

At this time, the effluent is being tested by Corix, by YTG and by the City.

"The City (tests) did show a minor failure in fecal coliforms during our January 28, 2015 sampling," Carlson reported.

It passed the other tests by Corix and YTG.

"I do not think that YG will consider this failure significant enough to restart the 3 month acceptance testing period," Carlson warned. "Should this acceptance be granted, the plant will be fall under the responsibility of YG, Community Services. The intent of YG is for the plant to be owned and operated by the City of Dawson."

At present it is still the responsibility of Corix, the builder.

Test failures are not the only issues at the plant however. Carlson says there are a number of other problems which should be dealt with before the town ends up saddled with the O&M costs.

"I believe that this plant is not complete, not functional and does not meet the terms set out in our Water Licence. The true test, of course, will be this plant's ability to pass the parameters in our Water Licence and I do not think that this will happen this summer."

This is when the old screening plant failed to meet licence standards and the WWTP has so far failed grandly every summer it has been in operation.

Graphic: overhead view of the two clarifier tanks in the building. At the present time only one of these is functioning, while redundancy is a requirement of the water licence.

Internally, the plant is suffering from problems caused by the poor quality of the concrete liner in most of its vital systems. This has been known of for a couple of years now, Carlson says, but no permanent repairs have been made.

"Last week the collector drive failed in the clarifier in use. This was most likely caused by the bubbling and peeling concrete liner which detached from the clarifier walls and broke the drive.

"This deficient concrete has not been addressed in over 2 years now and has allowed to degrade to the point that it is causing major malfunctions in the process. At present there is still no plan to address it. We are currently operating with no redundancy in the operation, as required by our water licence."

Carlson is concerned that if the same problem shows up in the remaining clarifier, the plant will not be functional at all. His message, which has unanimous acceptance at the council table, is that every part of the plant should be complete and in tip-top working order before it should be judged to be acceptable for a handover to the government and, ultimately, to the town.

Early results of medication reduction project are a reason to celebrate

Six months into an innovative project funded through Canadian Foundation for Healthcare Improvement (CFHI), Copper Ridge Place residents and staff are experiencing positive results. Minister of Health and Social Services Mike Nixon announced in Dawson on February 27 the work of the facility's special care team to reduce the use of antipsychotic medication in residents with dementia is proving very successful.

"The World Health Organization estimates that between two and ten percent of all cases of dementia start before the age of 65, and the risk of dementia doubles every five years after age 65," he told a mixed group of seniors, care workers and social workers a the McDonald Lodge seniors residence.

Since the number of adults reaching older age brackets is increasing and since one quarter of all adults over the age of 80 have some degree of the problem, the Health and Social Services Department is looking for better ways to deal with the related problems, which have to do with more than just memory loss.

"The medical community is increasingly recognizing," Nixon said, "that dementia syndromes are varied, and have different symptoms, and changes in thinking, behaviour and personality are all important.

"Many individuals with dementia display behavioural changes that make their care challenging, and antipsychotics have sometimes been used to manage these behaviours."

At the national level,
Choosing Wisely Canada – a coalition of physician groups – is promoting the reduced reliance on antipsychotics for dementia patients. CFHI is also supporting their efforts.

This project has been driven, in part, due to the increased understanding that this family of medications can have serious side effects, including an increased risk of falls, strokes, heart attacks and even death.

The Yukon is one of 15 health care bodies across Canada to be accepted into the Reducing Antipsychotic Medication Use in Long Term Care pilot project, which began in June, 2014. The territory receives funding and support from CFHI. It is the only Northern territory chosen to participate.

"Of the residents on the special care unit who are prescribed antipsychotic medications, more than half have had their prescriptions for antipsychotics reduced since the pilot project began in August," Nixon said. "Staff report that some residents are enjoying an improved quality of life – this is a huge benefit and a clear sign of success.

"Our goal is to reduce the use of antipsychotic medications among Continuing Care residents by 15 to 20% of current use by September, 2015. Since beginning the project at Copper Ridge Place, I'm pleased to announce that the use of antipsychotic medications has been decreased by approximately 50%."

"We are delighted to see the impressive results achieved by Yukon Continuing Care, one of the leaders in this Canada-wide effort," CFHI president Maureen O'Neil said in a press release. "Through collaboration, we are helping to spread innovative ways of working that are improving care for patients and their families."

Over the past six months staff at the Copper Ridge Place special care unit have worked on person-centred strategies to manage difficult behaviours that resulted in the use of antipsychotics. The unit has now reduced the number these prescriptions by more than half, and discontinued use completely for some residents.

"One of the benefits of a small jurisdiction participating in pilots such as this is our ability to see immediate results. This is a tremendous success to be celebrated," Nixon said.

Nixon indicated that the initiative is now being rolled out at the Thomson Centre in Whitehorse and will soon be extended to all Continuing Care facilities in the territory.

One individual whose antipsychotics were discontinued is now participating in activities and engaging with others around him.

His son said today: "The results of this program for my father have been very positive. He now has a notably increased ability to interact with family, visitors and his caregivers. To see my father now, he is clearly well adjusted and comfortable in his environment and is quite obviously at home. I would not have hoped for such a positive outcome from his admission just over one year ago. My deep appreciation goes to the very caring staff of Copper Ridge. We are very pleased and comforted by the quality of our father's care."

Nixon indicated that the government had received $50,000 to launch the program,

Minister of Health and Social Services Mike Nixon (at right) with some residents of the McDonald Lodge and staff from there as well as other departments.

but that it is costing more than that, and some of that funding has involved staff training to "change the way we think on the floor when we're managing different behaviours."

The focus of the program is to remove the medication completely where possible.

The Minister was open to discussion after his speech and the topics ranged from provision of mental health services in the rural areas to group home solutions for children and adults.

Staff gave Nixon a tour of the Lodge and commented favourably on the new replacement facility, which can be seen under construction on the far side of Victory Gardens, on Church Street.

Trek Over the Top #22 arrives

The first rider in this year's Trek over the Top was Randy Robertson, who rolled into Dawson at 12:20 on Thursday. At that point there were 144 snow machines yet to arrive.

Snowmobile enthusiasts have been churning their way over here, on the Top of the World/ Taylor Highway route ever since 1993 and while the number of riders is nowhere near what they were at the event's height, before the terrorism threats of 9-11 and new border regulations on both sides made it harder for organizers in both Yukon and Alaska to keep the fun going, there are still grizzled veterans and brand new riders every year.

There was a time when there were three weekends and a total of more than 600 riders. Perhaps the weaker Loonie will see those numbers climb back up again. This year there are ten more entries than last year.

The route across the river at Dawson is back to normal this year, with the nicely groomed ice bridge leading into town straight off the Top of the World Highway and onto Front Street.

There appeared to be a few riders who had last year's circuitous route in mind and ended up hitting Front Street over the dike south of the Visitors Information Centre, where they needed to check in with the temporary Canada Customs post, as well as with the greeters from the Klondike Visitors Association, who run the event on this side in partnership with the Alaska Trailblazers.

KVA staff and volunteers welcome trekkers

After Customs, they picked up their town maps, meal and drink tickets, T-shirts and got ready to head off to Diamond Tooth Gerties for the first evening of fun.

The ride is the big attraction, but the folks at this end work hard to make it a memorable visit for the trekkers, some of whom are diehards who have been to 16 or more of the annual events.

There are a couple of fine dinners at Gerties, and a Poker Run around Klondike Landmarks. Of special note this year is the return of the ever popular snow machine drop, in which a derelict snowmobile is dropped on the river festooned with markers from a helicopter. The person who has picked the marker closest to where it hits wins the prize.

Indoor events included a Texas Hold'em Poker Tournament, a variety of games (a sort of triathlon) at the curling club.

Chocolate - Food of the Gods

by Willow Peerenboom

Have you ever wondered why chocolate taste so good, why you feel great when you eat it, or why just inhaling that sweet smooth aroma can lift your spirits? One of my favorite things to do on a cold winter night is to curl up with a steamy creamy cup of hot cocoa. In the last few weeks of our minus forty below weather it became a frequent companion.

Chocolate, which is derived from the fruit of the Theobroma cacao tree, has been an avid part of many cultures for thousands of years dating back to 1900 BC. A native to tropical regions of Central and South America, it was originally named Kakaw in the Mayan empire. Cacao is actually one of twenty two species of Theobroma.

In pre-Columbian Mesoamerican civilizations the cacao seed was used as a form of currency. A person could purchase a new mantle cloth for eighty to one hundred seeds, or for the same amount could purchase a courtesan. A pig could be purchased for approximately thirty to forty seeds and a chicken for ten to fifteen seeds. The seeds were also ground and mixed with other ingredients, usually vanilla, cayenne, and maise and fermented to create a bitter alcoholic beverage that was drunk only by men, as it was known to be "toxic" to women and children.

Although Cacao was first introduced to Spain in 1519 the term Cacao which is a Nahuatl derived Spanish word, was not introduced until Swedish naturalist Linnaeus published his taxonomic binomial system in 1753 and coined the genus and species as Theobroma Cacao. The term Theobroma is a Greek word that translates literally to "The food of the gods".

Chocolate, as we know it, comes in many varieties from sweetened milk chocolate to pure unsweetened dark chocolate. What we know as chocolate is actually a combination of ground cacao seeds (known as nibs or in liquid state as liquor), often vanilla, and cacao butter which is the fat extracted from the seed.

The color of the chocolate or type of chocolate is largely due to the quantity of chocolate liquor as well as other ingredients. Here are a few examples of well-known varieties and what they contain.

Bitter or Baker's Chocolate is made by mixing the ground nibs or liquor with cacao butter to create a smooth solid consistency.

Dark or Semi-Sweet Chocolate is made by adding sugar to bitter chocolate, but not too much or it becomes sweet chocolate.

Couverture is a cacao butter rich dark chocolate commonly used by chefs and quality chocolate makers such as Lindt.

Milk Chocolate is made by adding milk powder, condensed milk, or liquid milk to sweet chocolate, but must still contain a minimum of twenty percent cacao solids to be considered true milk chocolate.

And last but not least White Chocolate is unique in the sense that it is the only chocolate that does not contain cacao solids, made by combining sugar, milk and cacao butter; it is considered a confection rather than a true chocolate.

All of these types of chocolate contain certain components that contribute to the myths around chocolate.

Chocolate as an aphrodisiac has been mentioned in various texts for hundreds of years, and until recently was considered to be a myth; however recent studies have shown that chocolate contains methylxanthine, an active biological substance that competes with adenosine (a presynaptic inhibitor modulator) and blocks its receptor. This blockage can contribute to arousal. Decreased blood pressure and increased insulin sensitivity also contribute to a high metabolizing of glucose.

Cacao in its natural form contains a wide variety of substances, some of which can have an effect on the chemistry of the human body.

In addition to methylxanthine cacao also contains the following:

Anandamide – An endogenous cannabinoid neurotransmitter.

Arginine – An amino acid. Caffeine, Theobromine and Theophylline - Are all methylated xanthines, which act as stimulants in the human Oxalic acid – Is an organic compound and is classified as a dicarboxylic acid.

Phenethylamine - Known as the love chemical, it is an endogenous alkaloid that is quickly metabolized by monoamine oxidase B and does not reach the brain in significant amounts.

Phenylalanine - Is an essential amino acid.

Phytates - Is the salt form of Phytic acid and is a saturated cyclic acid, it is the principal storage form of phosphorus in many plant tissues.

Sugar - Sucrose.

Tannin - A tannin is a biomolecule that acts as an astringent and is a bitter plant polyphenolic compound that binds to and precipitates proteins and various other compounds including amino acids and alkaloids.

Tryptophan - An essential amino acid and a precursor to serotonin, melatonin, and niacin.

Tyramine - Is found in processed chocolate after fermentation, but not in raw cacao and is a naturally occurring monoamine compound derived from the amino acid tyrosine.

There has been some study in regards to the effects chocolate can have on cholesterol levels. Generally the fat content of chocolate is broken down as such: one third is monounsaturated fat oleic acid, one third is saturated fat stearic acid, and one third is saturated fat palmitic acid. Unlike other types of saturated fats, stearic acid does not raise your levels of LDL cholesterol in the blood stream and has neutral effects on cholesterol; stearic acid can also be converted to oleic acid in the liver. One study claims that small but regular amount of dark chocolate may reduce the risk of heart attack.

All in all chocolate in moderate amounts really is good for you providing it is as pure as possible and not the milk and sugar confection that coats our candy bars and shows up in boxes of chocolates and other chocolate type candies.

Find yourself a nice chunk of sweetened dark chocolate and enjoy it without guilt, knowing it's a treat your body will thank you for!

HUMANE SOCIETY DAWSON UPDATE

with Danielle Thorne, Humane Society Dawson

Meet Storm

Storm is one of our longer-term residents here at the Humane Society Dawson. He is a big, beautiful, senior husky mix. Storm was found tied out front of our animal shelter one morning last April, and because of this, we do not know much about his past. We've gathered that he may have been abused at one point or another, because he can be a very skittish dog. Once you earn his trust, however, Storm is the most amazing dog you will ever meet. He is gentle, loving and loval

Storm needs a second chance at life, and we are looking for one special and lucky person to give this to him. He has done his time pulling sleds and skis, and would now be happiest with a cozy bed in a loving home. Although earning Storm's trust will take a small amount of patience in the beginning, you will be rewarded each and every day knowing that this wonderful dog finally has the home he deserves, and that you were the one to give it to him!

To learn more about Storm, please contact the Humane Society Dawson at 993-6900

Centennial Ball a Red Letter Affair

by Dan Davidson

While the Klondike Centennial Society probably wouldn't want most of its major events to be running in the red, this year's Centennial Ball was awash with that colour and no one minded at all. Billed as the R.C.M.P. Centennial Ball, this year's event (the third annual) served as a kick off to the force's Yukon centennial year and to its Centennial Patrol, which left from here the next morning.

As Yukon government leader John Ostashek put it, during his brief after dinner speech: "This kicks off a decade of anniversaries. We're going to have some exciting times."

Tourism minister Doug Phillips (introduced as "the horrible" due to a typo at the executive council offices) was even more emphatic about the place of the R.C.M.P. when it comes to promoting the Yukon as a destination.

"Doesn't Dawson know how to throw a party!" he said, going on to note that the mounties who have accompanied him on his many trips Outside have been a major drawing card where ever he has gone.

"They are known throughout the world," he said. "I wish they could find me a little midget Mountie outfit," he added, indicating that he might be more warmly received in some places if he looked the part.

MLA David Millar kept his remarks brief, basically urging the crowd of over 275 to have a good evening and enjoy themselves.

There were a lot of mounties in that crowd. Mayor Art Webster noted that there were more at the banquet than had accompanied Inspector Constantine when he opened the post at Fortymile 100 years ago.

Dawson First Nation Chief Steve Taylor welcomed the many guests to the "traditional territory of the Han people" and hoped that the cooperative spirit that went into the planning of the Centennial Patrol would continue to mark relations between First Nations and the Force, which he said had been improving.

From Ottawa came RCMP Deputy Commissioner Herman Beaulac, who apologized for not bringing "any hot air from Ottawa with me." The organization of the Centennial Patrol was, he said, a good example of the partnership that has existed historically between the force and local residents. He jokingly ran through a century old list of qualifications for joining the Yukon bound force of N.W.M.P., noting that some of the items, like abstinence and large size might disqualify some of the members present that evening, including Beaulac himself, who is a short man. However, he noted that today's members of the force and patrol were just as special in their way as those of a century ago.

Inspector Barry Kutryk, the snowmobile leader of the Centennial Patrol, noted that the planning for this actually started during the year of Canada 125, when the idea

Centennial Patrol Heads North

by Dan Davidson

It was a brisk but sunny Sunday morning (Feb. 26) in Dawson when eleven men and one woman set out on the first leg of the Centennial Patrol, an event set to commemorate a number of important anniversaries for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Six regular officers and six temporary special constables began the trek to Fort MacPherson to mark the 100th anniversary of the force's arrival in the Yukon, the 90th anniversary of the first Dawson-Fort MacPherson patrol, the 84th anniversary of the famous Lost Patrol (probably the best known patrol), the 75th anniversary of the Dempster Patrol, and the 50th anniversary of the Last Patrol in 1945.

Travelling on nine Polaris snow machines and three dog teams, the crew will follow the traditional route of the annual February-March patrol, a trail which has never yet been conquered by snow machines. The route can be traced through the Seela Pass, Hart River system, Wind River, Peel River, Caribou Mountain Cut-off and from there to Fort MacPherson by way of the Peel River. The route back is the same in reverse, making this just about a 1,000 mile (1600 km)round trip.

In spite of late breaking problems ith the Polaris snow machines. which had mechanical crews up until 5 AM replacing potentially defective engine parts, the patrol was ready to go on time Sunday morning. A large crowd turned out at the corner of King and Third to watch the departure from in front of the Old Post Office. Master of ceremonies Ron McFadyen introduced the 12 mushers and kept the ceremonies moving along. After the blessing by Chaplin Des Carroll, mail and dispatches were turned over to trek leader Inspector Barry Kutryk and Staff Sgt. Brian Gudmundson, who was in charge of the three dog teams.

Other members of the team include regular RCMP officers Constable Karen Olito, Sgt. Doug Harris, Cpl. Peter Greenlaw and Const. Pat Maloney. The civilians, who were commissioned as Special Constables at the Centennial Ball the evening before, are: Fred Blake (a Fort MacPherson resident whose family history has long ties to this patrol), Tim Allen, Wayne Huffman, Peter Nagano, Jim Thompson and Mike Blumenschein.

The plan is for three of the snow machines to blaze the trail while the remaining six carry camp and supplies. The mushers and their dogs will travel a day or two behind the trail breakers. They expect to be in Fort MacPherson by March 12 and back in Dawson by the end of the month.

At about 12:15 the dog teams set off down Third Avenue, making a left turn at Duke Street and heading for the Yukon River. There was a bit of a panic when 7 1/2 year old Megan Gates didn't get out of the way in time and got caught in the traces of Brian Gudmundson's team. She was hauled along beneath the dogs for a few metres. She emerged shaken but unscathed a few seconds later when they stopped the team. Her father, Michael Gates, reported later that she was fine and that RCMP brass have promised her something special when the Musical Ride hits town in mid-summer.

A cure for Cabin Fever

Story & Photos By Dan Davidson

As interesting as it is to have all manner of visiting art exhibits from across Canada filling up the ODD Gallery on a regular basis, one of the things that locals look forward to the most is an exhibit by our own people.

The latest Dawson City Arts Society Member's Exhibition, which ran from January 29 - February 26, 2015, was just that kind of local delight. Instead of being built around a particular theme or the work of one artist, it showcased the work of twenty-six creative people, and while the theme might have been "Cabin Fever" inviting "creativity in from the cold", these members of the society showed a lot of variety, from abstract images to realism.

Participating Artists this year were Erica Barta, Palma Berger, Ange Bonnici, Bill Burns, Gail Calder, Joyce Caley, David Curtis, Christine Fuller, Shelley Hakonson, Patty Jackson, Wanda Jackel, Leslie Leong, John Lodder, Madi Piller, Anne Saunders, Rachael Siminovitch, Dan Sokolowski, Jasmine Stange, John Steins, Julien Strasfeld, Alice Thompson, Veronica Verkley, Meg Walker and Bo Yeung.

Gail Calder's "Surviving Cabin Fever" suggests that there may be some medicinal assistance required.

Alice Thompson's "Log Cabin Interior" was inspired by looking into the Jack London Cabin.

Palma Berger's "Last of Fall Colours" looked at the scene next to one of the dredge ponds along the highway. "I was fascinated by the amount of colour still there in the fall."

Veronica Verkley produced another of her framed miniature dioramas, with a small person inside an openended box structure. The label said it was motorized.

Dan Sokolowski provided "Fire and Ice", three cold minutes of slides from the January 1998 ice storm.

Anne Saunders' "The Gift" shows an eagle soaring above some mountains.

Shelly Hakonson's "Mid-January 2015" comes with the comment that she finds "absolute, committed, dedicated, unending creativity" is her best medicine for dealing with the winter S.A.D. blahs.

On a humorous note, there is Bill Burns' "Safety gear for Small Animals", a plate depicting several ungulates, one of which is wearing a reflective orange safety vest.
