A Field Study Approach Brings Students North

Story by Laurie Cassie –
Grade 6/7 teacher, David
Livingstone Elementary,
Vancouver, BC

I believe there are great benefits to experiential learning. You can read about something, you can write about something, you can talk about something. But when you EXPERIENCE something, the learning sticks.

The excitement that swelled around the gold rush fascinates me. The idea that, with little or no mining skills, would-be prospectors walked away from their lives and headed into the harshest of environments is bizarre by today's standards. It's also captivating and that's a great learning environment.

I also believe that the north holds great potential for Canada – especially our youth. Canada has much more to offer to our youth than just the big cities along the 49th parallel. When you are introduced to people, places, ideas in your youth, later these things are not seen as foreign, impossible, scary. Instead, you can look back and say, "Yeah. I've been there. It was great. Maybe there is a future there for me."

Big City Kids to the Yukon

Some of our grade 6 'and 7's are used to a little pampering: being driven to and from places, fresh sushi restaurants, inexpensive fresh fruit year round, a short internet access at your fingertips, fresh laundry all the time or being able to head outdoors without giving a thought to the weather. As the days went on, the students had realized that life in the Yukon is very different than in Vancouver. We learned to persevere. We learned to make do. We learned it's OK to be dirty for a while. We learned it's OK to slow down and just see if it will work out.

There were many 'firsts' for students on this trip: first time camping, first time on a plane, first time being away from home, first time in the Yukon and the first time being in a town so small you can walk from end to end. It's definitely the first time we've written an article for a newspaper!

Tombstone Territorial Park
By Joshua Chan

From Dawson City, we travelled north to Tombstone Territorial Park for hiking and a workshop with the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in. Here we learned about their worldview, the hardships they've faced and how hard they are working to teach the language to their youth. We learned a few words and stories, too. We learned how to do some basic beading; it's much harder than it looks. We went hiking and saw lots of moose tracks and miles of natural beauty. Our guide taught us bear safety and pointed out things like branches that had been stripped by porcupine. Tombstone Territorial Park is majestic.

Adventures at Muktuk
By Lauren Lee and Betty Fung

How many students from Vancouver have experienced camping with 125 dogs at a dog-sledding kennel in the middle of the Yukon? This once-in-a-lifetime experience changed our lives and made us realize that the world is more than Vancouver. Camping in the wilderness under the midnight sun, playing with the sled dogs, canoeing down the Takhini River in a hail storm all opened our eyes to how to have fun without going to a mall or turning on a device. We can have fun without the internet!

What We Learned
By Charlotte Wood and Fleur
Auton-Strolz

We're glad our teacher found the story of the Klondike gold rush bizarre. We learned you don't have to live in a big, busy city. Real estate here is out of control. We learned we can live adventurously surrounded by nature and history. Cities aren't the only places where you can live and have fun. We canoed – fun! We learned about hunting – sounds interesting! We did a lot of hiking – fun! We learned about ice fishing – sounds fascinating. There are lots of ways to live here and have fun – these are just a few.

Story and Photos By Josee Bonhomme

At the close of Part One of this story (in the July 13 edition of the Klondike Sun), I mentioned that the Yukon River Quest is supported by an impressive list of sponsors. For example, Andrew Kuczynski of Gold Trail Jewellers creates small solid gold canoe pendants and other awards as reminders of how special Dawson is, along with the great accomplishment achieved by this event. He has supported the race for seven years now (see page 9).

Kaminak Gold Corp., now to become GoldCorp for short, contributed $5,000 this year; a new checkpoint at Coffee Creek; and food for everyone, racers and volunteers. The Whitehorse Star printed a special full-colour supplement; it was so popular the 200 copies the Quest had for distribution were rare objects to be fought over. Jeff Brady had a hand in it, and it was fabulous work.

Brady is one of the instigators of the race going back to 1997-1998 and was the former of the Skagway News. Brady (58 years young) and his son, Danny (15 years old), raced as the "Brady Boys" this year in a respectable time of 66:07:16, finishing in 23rd place in their category. This experience would have been the best male-bonding session ever.

It would indeed provide one of the best opportunities for challenge and adventure in the world. Which is why the race attracts nearly 250 kayakers, canoeists and now stand-up paddleboarders from all around the world.

The Perfect Storm team (two-man canoe) took the honours with a fastest time this year in 46:14:56 (Jeff Brainard of Roslyn, ON, Gaétan Plourde of Kanata, ON). The fastest all-girl team Woopalaye (tandem canoe) came in with a time of 50:42:22 (Laurélie Harvey, Joannie Pelletier of Québec, QC). The last paddler, Dave Barnes the Paddlingboy (from Saltspring Island, BC), clocked in at 70:15:52 gliding his solo kayak into port on Saturday at 20:16:52, in 77th place. A safety boat follows the last paddler to the very end; then the final checkpoint can be shut down.

Safety boats are the Saint-Bernards of the Yukon River Quest. They are trained for rescues, never make a wake for the paddlers, and just keep an eye out for opportunities to rescue and help. Or photo opportunities when Harry Kern serves as ballast with his BIG cameras.

Kern was involved with the race from the start, also one of its instigators. He rides in the safety boats and gets great photos. He is always on the ready for a rescue, but there rarely are any. This year, the major event for him was witnessing some lettuce that overtopped a large bowl being taken into the school's gym for the final banquet. He made sure the news reporter was informed.

There were 16 withdrawals before and along the course because of personal or technical reasons, and unexpected health conditions on a marathon event. After all, an "elite sport" is what this might be called in other parts.

The duty of care involved in such an event is enormous. This crew of volunteers, board members and directors, sponsors, mainly from the Yukon, pulled off a magnificent event. It seems it's good to have paddled the race to volunteer, it's very specialized. Because the sport of moving water paddling demands high safety ethics, it makes the job somewhat easier. But this whole crew, about 300 all told, did a fantastic job.

The final awards ceremony and banquet were well attended by about 500 people, at the Robert Service School's gym. It was standing room only; all meal tickets were sold out. The Dawson hospitality crew showed up with barbecued vegetables and steaks, a huge salad, bread rolls, all a paddler hopes for after 715 km of admiring the scenery.

The Dawson Fire Department is great at managing those barbecues and the caboose was steaming hard. They are the only ones qualified to respond to their own fire while feeding 500 people! The Percy de Wolfe Society members graciously served the crowd with three volunteers.

And that's Dawson and the Yukon River Quest victory. One racer was overheard outside on a cell phone describing his experience: "It's super-fun," he said. And that's a consensus. The best news story is that one marriage proposal was made on the Midnight Dome late on July 2nd. One finisher was granted very special privileges.

Social Infrastructure Spending Strengthens Communities and Grows the Yukon Economy

Press Release

WHITEHORSE (July 14) —The Honourable Jean-Yves Duclos, Minister of Families, Children and Social Development, and the Honourable Stacey Hassard, Minister of Yukon Housing Corporation, today announced measures to give Canadians greater access to more affordable housing, including the doubling of current funding under the Investment in Affordable Housing (IAH) initiative, addressing high housing needs in the North, supporting affordable housing for seniors, building and renovating shelters and transition houses for victims of family violence, and addressing repairs and improving energy and water efficiency of existing social housing.

Federal Budget 2016 investments in affordable housing will provide targeted support to those who need it most, including in Yukon, and create good jobs that help grow Canada's economy in a clean and sustainable way. The federal and territorial governments will work together to quickly deliver the new funding.

Quick Facts

- In addition to existing funding under the Investment in Affordable Housing (IAH), the funding levels by the Governments of Canada and Yukon have been doubled to more than $6.6 million over two years.

- The Government of Yukon, through Yukon Housing Corporation, is responsible for choosing the programs they design and deliver. Yukon has the flexibility to invest in a range of affordable housing programs in order to meet housing needs. Initiatives can include, for example, new construction, renovation, affordability assistance and independent living (accessibility, modifications for persons with disabilities and seniors), and support of accommodations for victims of family violence.

Through the IAH, the Government of Canada is also providing to Yukon over two years:

- more than $1.3 million to support the construction, repair and adaptation of affordable housing for seniors;
- almost half a million dollars to support the construction and renovation of shelters and transition houses for victims of family violence;
- more than half a million dollars to help address the increasing demand for repairs as social housing units age, and to improve efficiency and reduce energy and water use.
- As the need for affordable housing is also particularly high in the North, the Government of Canada is providing an additional $8 million over two years to address urgent housing needs in Yukon.

OPINION

Uffish Thoughts: Thunder, Lightning and Power Shortages

By Dan Davidson

It's been an interesting week in Dawson for weather and power outages. Three of the last four days have blessed Dawson with major downpours that had small rivers of water running down the street outside my house on Seventh Avenue, and pouring out the downspout of our veranda's eaves-trough as if it was coming from a pressure hose.

Today was even more interesting, Thunder boomed overhead, the temperature dropped about 10 degrees and what began as light rain shifted to a torrential downpour and then morphed into hail up to a centimeter in diameter, falling so thickly that it covered the lawn I had just finished mowing, like a thin coat of snow.

It was heavy. It was loud bouncing off our metal roof. It was accompanied by gusts of wind that had some of the trees across the street from us trying to do the limbo. And it was so spectacular that several of the neighbours joined my son and me in watching it from their porches until it turned back to rain after about 30 minutes and melted all the little white pellets.

Equally amazing is the speed with which these downpours dried up within hours after they occurred. At the height there have been large puddles and running water in the streets, and yet I've been able to walk the dog without having her get muddy feet before the evening was over.

Where the sun hits, after the clouds clear, the heat quickly returns. It's 10:40 in the evening at this writing, and I'm enjoying my summer time writing desk in shorts, short sleeve shirt and sandals (I do wear them with socks) listening to some light jazz and soaking up the sun.

More annoying, however, has been the epidemic of power outages we've had over the last three days. The first one was 11 minutes here in town (longer in the suburbs). That's fairly standard for us when the power does go out. It takes 10 to 15 minutes to bring the diesel plant online and begin to energize the various zones. The next evening, however, was unusual in that the stopwatch setting on my iPhone timed it at 28 minutes. It was probably a little bit longer than that.

At that point I composed a short memo to the ever-vigilant Janet Patterson at Yukon Energy and her early morning reply informed me that it was lightning strikes somewhere along the grid.

Well, there was quite a bit of thunderous rumbling in the air on both occasions, so there must have been lightning somewhere, though there were no flashes here. That's the problem with that unified electrical grid we're all tied into. The actual problem can be anywhere along the system.

So we arrive at today (July 14). I've described the storm already, and it came bundled with crack-o-doom type thunder that had our dog unable to decide quite where to hide and looking at us as if we were crazy to be standing outside, apparently enjoying Mother Nature's performance.

I'm in the middle of supper, watching a Netflix movie on my iPad mini, when the lights go out. This is when I learn that there's about a three minute buffer on Netflix streaming, because it takes that long for the movie to freeze after our house Wifi quits. My timer gives me a reading of 14:56 on this one, which means it was probably actually 15 minutes, allowing for the time it took me to trigger the app on my iPod.

I'm kind of hoping that this spate of outages has come to an end for now. I'm getting tired of having to reset all the digital timers on our kitchen appliances.

Addenda: I didn't get my wish. There was another massive outage that very night and two more over the next two days. It was not the best of weeks.

Victoria's Poet Laureate Visits Dawson

Story & Photo
By Dan Davidson

Victoria poet Yvonne Blomer presented a reading of her work to half a dozen enthusiasts at the Dawson Community Library on June 13.

Writer, critic, teacher and poet, Blomer was born in Zimbabwe, and came to Canada when she was two years old. With her husband, Rupert, she has taught in Japan, cycled through Southeast Asia, and lived in the UK, where she completed a Masters in Creative Writing with Distinction at The University of East Anglia. Yvonne is proud to be serving as the Poet Laureate for the City of Victoria, BC, and is the Artistic Director emeritus of the Planet Earth Poetry reading series.

She began her reading with poems from her 2014 collection, As if a Raven.

"It's a book of poems about birds that show up in Biblical texts," she said, "so it's exploring creation, destruction and life."

The title poem references the raven that Noah is said to have sent forth from the ark after the Flood, and asks "why would anyone trust this bird / to come back / and not flap its crooked wings / in the new wild earth / making mountains where none were and monsters ... After several other bird poems, Blomer turned to a passage of travel memoir from her forthcoming book, Sugar Ride: Cycling from Hanoi to Kuala Lumpur, a chronicle of a cycling trip she and her husband took in 1999. She has used some of this imagery in poems in other books, but this will be a prose memoir. The passage she read came from one of their longest days on the road. She warned her audience that she felt she sounded a bit tired and whiney in this extract, but this tended to be obscured by the exotic nature of the journey.

She concluded the reading portion of the evening with several newer poems, some so new that corrective scribbles could be seen on the paper from which she was reading.

"Weather" recalled a day last summer when the fires on the mainland were so thick that ash was falling in Nanaimo: "Sometimes, swimming, you are also immersed in fire / ash coats your wet hair / the sun has been stolen / replaced by an orange ball ..."

From a series of poems about the environment, she read "In the Box from the World Wildlife Fund": "In the box from the World Wildlife Fund there is the last polar bear / in the belly of the box, the bear's hollow high strung heart ..."

"Wolf Management" is a commentary on the current wolf cull being practiced in British Columbia, a poem she has actually read as one of her monthly presentations during her time as Poet Laureate of Victoria, in which post she doesn't hesitate to be a bit political at times. This one begins "The moon, lopsided, half-full / is a winter wolf, ears wind-cocked / mouth the dark 'o' of howl ..."

During a four-year term, the Poet Laureate is required to produce three new original works each year that reflect or represent ideas and issues of importance to the people of Victoria, and recite poems at City events, Council meetings and the annual Victoria Book Prize Awards Gala. In addition, the Poet Laureate hosts a number of poetry events in the community, collaborates with the Greater Victoria Public Library on readings, workshops and its new Poet-in-Residence days, and serves as a mentor for the Youth Poet Laureate.

Blomer says it's a challenging post, but well worth her time and interest. In addition to a $3500 honorarium, she receives $2000 annually to use in the promotion of a poetry event as well as program activities at the Greater Victoria Public Library.

There was a good discussion about inspirations and methods, ravens, the difficulties and joys of blending a writer's career with being a mother.

Following her stay in Dawson,

Blomer and her family were heading north to Inuvik, enjoying a return to the Yukon, which she had last visited in 2015. Earlier she had visited Skagway and Dyea and did a reading in Atlin during the music festival there.

LETTER

Dear Dawson City Staff and Council

This morning I arrived at work to find a bicycle locked to the front stairs of the Klondike Kloset and tried all day with no success to have the City or the RCMP remove the offending object. City staff and the RCMP juggled my complaint back and forth, apparently unaware of who was responsible for this issue.

Eventually, after many calls during the afternoon and a site visit from both City staff and an RCMP officer, I was told that it was neither of their problems and that the property owner is responsible. I have been unable to have the property owner respond to this situation in a prompt manner and I do not believe that the responsibility of removing this bicycle should fall on me.

There could be serious legal repercussions if a tourist or someone walking home drunk from the bar is hurt by tripping over this kind of obstruction. I think that allowing people to lock their bikes up to any business frontage is a major public nuisance that the City should look into. Maybe the City of Dawson should put some money into providing bike racks in downtown Dawson so that business owners do not need to go looking for bolt cutters to get rid of errant bikes.

Sincerely,

Concerned Dawson City Employee

Double Value for 2016 Placer and Quartz Assessment Work

Story by Josée Bonhomme

Three readings in the Legislature enabled an Order in Council to be ratified by the Yukon Government on July 18 to allow double the credits for work performed this year, retroactive to February 1, 2016. This is for both Placer and Quartz claims, outside Settlement Lands. Prospecting leases are not included in this effort to stimulate the economy.

Miners are advised to contact their Mining Recorders if qualifying work was reported earlier than July 18. Work reported after this date will automatically be adjusted. This is an important opportunity for local miners.

History Hunter: Jack London's stories filled with Yukon history

Tarnel Abbot, London's great-granddaughter, unveils the new sign at Jack London Square with Mayor Wayne Potoroka.

Story By Michael Gates

*The Yukon News, June 30, 2016
Used with the author's permission*

The Jack London Museum in Dawson City consists of the cabin London was known to have stayed in during the gold rush, left; a standing cache (inspired by a Jim Robb painting); and the building that houses the Jack London exhibit, right.

I once wrote a piece about Jack London in which I posed the question: Did Jack London make the Klondike, or did the Klondike make him? The answer, of course, is that London's Yukon books and short stories were the basis upon which his writing career was established.

London is arguably the pre-eminent American author of the Twentieth Century. In fact, he may be the most widely read American author around the world. London wrote nearly 200 short stories during his tragically short writing career; in close to half of these, he turned to his northern muse for inspiration.

My wife Kathy and I recently attended, and participated in the Jack London Festival in Dawson City, an event sponsored by the Klondike Visitors Association, which celebrated the works of the great author. My modest part in the event was to join in a short discussion about Jack London that caused me to explore my own connection to the great author.

Almost thirty years ago, I aspired to write my first book of Yukon history. For inspiration, I turned to the works of other authors and read about their struggles to become writers. One of these authors was Jack London, and his semi-autobiographical work, "Martin Eden."

My first book focused upon the early prospecting and mining that preceded the Klondike gold rush, so one of the Jack London stories I decided I should read was "The Men of the Fortymile."

I recognized the historical underpinnings of this story. It is about two men in the early gold mining town of Forty Mile who resolved to settle a dispute by means of a duel. The residents of Forty Mile showed up to witness the battle, carrying with them a rope, with which to hang the winner. Faced with a no-win outcome, the two combatants settle their differences without firing a shot.

I was excited by this revelation for I had chronicled this event, which was described in detail in several different accounts uncovered during my historical research. With great excitement, I hurried to the Jack London Museum in Dawson to speak to Dick North, who at the time was the curator of the display, as well as being the Yukon's foremost authority on London's northern escapades.

One of the characters in the Fortymile story was a Catholic priest named Father Robeau. In fact, this character was based upon one of two Catholic priests who accompanied Bishop Seghers into the Yukon wilds the summer of 1886. Fathers Aloysius Robaut and Pascal Tosi spent the following winter at the tiny mining community that sprang up at the mouth of the Stewart River, the very same place that London later spent his short, but eventful winter in the north.

Father Robeau appears in another of London's stories, "The Priestly Prerogative," which describes some stampeder who spend the winter at Yukon Crossing, the end of the Dalton Trail. There, they make their fortune, not by mining gold, but rather by parceling up the cast-off offal from Klondike-bound cattle that were butchered along the banks of the Yukon River, and selling the product to dog mushers as dog feed. These men left the Yukon with a small fortune the following spring, without ever having set foot in the Klondike.

"The Unexpected," a short story published in McClure's Magazine in August, 1906, is another example. An article in the Dawson Daily News in August of 1906 attests to the fact that numerous individuals in Seattle and Juneau could confirm the truth of the details of London's story, which was based upon an actual event.

It involves a small party of stampeder stuck at Lituya Bay on the Alaskan coast. One member of the group tries to kill the other members of his party. After shooting one member of the party, the remaining two individuals, a man and his wife, are forced to guard him day and night. When this proves to be more than they can handle, they resort to hanging the killer.

North was not surprised by my discovery; he too, had made similar observations about the Yukon derivation of several of London's famous stories.

In his book, "Sailor on Snowshoes," Dick North reveals other historical events that inspired other London stories. The short story titled "Finis" was probably based upon the gruesome O'Brien murders. The real O'Brien hid in the snow-covered bush and murdered three men who were walking out over the frozen Yukon River the winter of 1899. He shoved their bodies into a hole in the river ice, but with some remarkable detective work, the Mounted Police were able to piece together the events of the case.

O'Brien was tried, and on the basis of the evidence that had been carefully gathered, was convicted of the three murders and was eventually hanged.

Similarly, North made the connection of the story "The League of Old Men" to the notorious case of the Nantuck Brothers, First Nation men who sought revenge for the sin of one European passerby by shooting the unsuspecting members of another passing party, killing one of the men in the process.

London later became rich and famous. The foundation upon which he constructed his reputation was built upon literary gold, rather than the mineral type that thousands of others sought during the gold rush. London's astute mind was attentive to the stories told to him during the long dark winter nights spent huddled in tiny log cabins at the mouth of the Stewart River.

It was the stories inspired by his personal experiences in the north and the accounts told by the old time prospectors that inspired his writing and fueled his remarkable rise to fame. When he used up all of the stories he had heard during those long winter nights, he wrote to other Klondikers for more story ideas. But by that time, his career had already been propelled along its meteoric rise.

London later summed up the Klondike experience in his own words in an essay that was published after his death:

"Having decided that I was a failure as a writer, I gave it up and left for the Klondike to prospect for gold. It was in the Klondike that I found myself. There nobody talks. Everybody thinks. You get your true perspective. I got mine."

I couldn't have said it better.

Yukon Employees' Union and Yukon government ratify new collective agreement

Press Release

WHITEHORSE (July 15)—The Government of Yukon and the government's largest employee group, represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada/Yukon Employees' Union, have ratified a new collective agreement.

"Thanks to the commitment and collaborative approach of the negotiating teams, an agreement has been reached that will continue to provide benefits for the government and employees," Minister responsible for the Public Service Commission Currie Dixon said. "The new agreement balances the needs of our employees with the Yukon government's commitment to provide excellent public services for the people of Yukon."

"A lot of hard work by both parties went into this agreement," Yukon Employees' Union president Steve Geick said. "We feel it is a fair deal and are pleased the membership took a similar view."

The new agreement sets out yearly salary increases totaling 5 per cent over three years – 2 per cent in 2016, 1.5 per cent in 2017 and 1.5 per cent in 2018. The three-year term is from January 1, 2016 to December 31, 2018.

The new collective agreement covers approximately 70 per cent of Government of Yukon employees.

Negotiations began in November 2015 to replace the previous collective agreement, which expired in December 2015.

Art gallery partnership launches in Carcross with support from Yukon government

Press Release

WHITEHORSE (July 14) — A new gallery dedicated to the promotion of Yukon visual art and artists has opened at Carcross Commons. Art House Carcross is a partnership between the Yukon Arts Centre Corporation, Carcross Tagish Management Corporation and the Southern Lakes Artist Collective.

"The Government of Yukon is pleased to support this initiative, which will further strengthen and diversify our economy and the visual arts industry itself," Minister of Economic Development Stacey Hassard said. "This new space allows Yukon artists to showcase export-ready products, develop business skills, and promote their art to regional, national, and international visitors of Carcross."

Visitors can view the artworks on display and, using digital tools, discover more about Yukon artists, their work and other art attractions. Visitors can purchase artwork online from Yukon galleries or directly from the artist. Featured artists are providing demonstrations of their skills at the gallery as well.

The Yukon Arts Centre Corporation (YACC) is a non-profit charitable organization that works to develop the cultural, social and economic benefits of arts in the territory. YACC's role in the project is to jury and curate the work shown in the gallery.

"The Yukon Arts Centre is thrilled to work with Carcross/Tagish First Nation, Yukon government and Southern Lakes Artist Collective to open a unique art space to promote the amazing and diverse visual artists in our territory," YAC gallery director Mary Bradshaw said.

The Carcross Tagish Management Corporation (CTMC), the economic development branch of the Carcross/Tagish First Nation (CTFN), is an important partner in the gallery project.

"Carcross Tagish Management Corporation is very excited about the cultural and economic opportunities created by the new gallery at Carcross Commons," chief executive officer Nelson Lepine said. "The project supports cultural tourism, strengthens community partnerships, offers training for Aboriginal artists and youth, and advances the business potential that exists in the Carcross region."

The project was initiated by Southern Lakes Artist Collective (SLAC) co-founder Lawrie Crawford. SLAC is a group of professional artists who work in a variety of art media. Members are knowledgeable about Yukon art and art techniques and are staffing the gallery.

"The Southern Lakes Artist Collective team is in a great position to provide information and tell stories of the artists, the community and the land," Crawford said. "This gallery space lays the foundation to build a vibrant arts scene in Carcross."

Visitors to the gallery can access the Yukon government's Art Adventures on Yukon Time guide to connect with more than 150 Yukon artists, art retailers and public art attractions.

The Yukon government is providing $75,100 over two years for the project through the Strategic Industries Development Fund.

CFYT Radiothon Sets Record

Story by CFYT Directors

As of the newspaper deadline, CFYT's Annual Radiothon has raised $5488.48 setting a new record. "Our goal was $5000.00 so we're thrilled!", said Treasurer Peter Menzies.

The Corporate Challenge is largely responsible for the record. Great River Air initiated the challenge as part of their three-year sponsorship agreement with CFYT. Businesses were asked to donate cash as well as services. The Challenge raised $2800.00 with the remaining $2688.48 coming through cash donations at the station and on-line payments.

Over the three years 2015 – 17, Great River Air is helping with studio renovations and the Radiothon. The goal is to help establish the Radiothon as a significant fundraiser to help ensure CFYT's long-term sustainability. "A corporate sponsor motivates volunteers and ensures that the Radiothon is well implemented and reported", commented President Ben Rudis. "It's a big deal."

Along with the above, Great River Air donated a sight seeing flight – the main draw prize for the event. Seventeen (17) other businesses and clubs donated almost $1000 worth of draw prizes, gift certificates and merchandise.

Peter Menzies is growing facial hair courtesy of the Radiothon. While on air, volunteers teased Menzies about growing a moustache. Within minutes, Garry Gammie parked in front of the station, walked into the studio and said that he would "....donate $300 if Peter doesn't shave till November and Paul Derry has to match me!" Within 20 minutes CFYT personality Paul Robatille negotiated a deal and Derry had matched the donation! "Just like the old days!", laughed Derry.

All funds will be used for operational costs such as telephone, power, rent and insurance.

CFYT is mid-way through its modernization plan. The studio has been renovated and a new broadcast console (mixing board) installed. YTG's Community Development Fund support made the console a reality back in March, 2016. The new equipment greatly expands CFYT's capacity to broadcast and record. For example, CFYT broadcast and recorded the "Klondike Cabiin Companion" on June 24 and 25, 2016. The radio play has been posted on CFYT's web site. A rebroadcast of the play is planned for August built sometime within the Riverside Arts Festival.

The CFYT leadership and volunteers extend their gratitude to everyone. Events like this show that everyone can play a role in helping keep non-profit groups vibrant. It's also a chance for the non-profit sector to acknowledge the important role local business plays in the health of clubs and the community.

CPAWS Yukon calls on Premiers to Protect Canada's Wilderness and Fight Climate Change

Press Release

WHITEHORSE – As Canada's thirteen territorial and provincial Premiers meet in Whitehorse this week to collaborate on issues of national importance, CPAWS Yukon is calling on our nation's leaders to implement strong action on climate change, including emissions reductions and protection of Canada's wilderness.

At their last meetings in Vancouver in March, governments agreed to create a pan-Canadian framework for clean growth and climate change, which would include actions to limit temperature increase and foster resilience to climate change. In order to achieve these goals, steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions will need to be taken quickly and our ecosystems will need to be protected. CPAWS Yukon urges Canada's premiers to look at the creation of more provincial, territorial and marine protected areas as the backbone of a climate adaptation strategy. Chris Rider, Executive Director of CPAWS Yukon stated, "In the fight against climate change, conservation needs to be a cornerstone of our efforts. Nature is essential for both reducing our vulnerability to the impacts that are already happening, and mitigating climate change in the future."

Natural areas provide a necessary service by storing the carbon that it emitted into the atmosphere. In fact, Canada's Boreal forest stores about 186 billion tons of carbon, mostly within soils and peatlands. But as these ecosystems are altered by climate change or converted to other uses such as mining and oil and gas extraction, they can actually become sources of carbon emissions, and their ability to shelter humans and all species from the impacts of climate change is diminished. Next to habitat loss, climate change is also the biggest threat to wildlife and biodiversity, with 20-30% of species at increased risk of extinction. Conservation corridors will be especially important for protecting nature that is 'on the move' as a result of climate change.

The Peel Watershed is a prime example of how climate change and nature protection are interlinked. The boreal forest of the Peel helps mitigate climate change by sequestering carbon, and the region also serves as the northern anchor of a wildlife corridor that would stretch from Yellowstone National Park in the United States to the Yukon, providing refuge for species that are displaced by climate change. CPAWS Yukon is working alongside the Yukon Conservation Society, the First Nation of Na-Cho Nyak Dun, the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in and Vuntut Gwitchin First Nation to protect the Peel from major industrial development that would damage its ecological value, including in the fight against climate change. Rider concluded: "Canada is very fortunate to have vast wilderness areas that ensure we have clean air and water, provide habitat for incredible biodiversity, and support our economy. CPAWS Yukon encourages Canada's Premiers to remember that protecting nature is also an essential part of the climate change solution."

Northern premiers confirm united stance against carbon price

Press Release

WHITEHORSE—The premiers of Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut are once again stating that the implementation of a carbon tax would have a negative impact on the quality of life in the North. Further, Canada's climate change goals must be conducted in a way that does not negatively impact northern costs of living, undermine food security or threaten emerging economies.

Climate change is having a disproportionate effect on northern communities and Northerners are already having to invest significant amounts of money for adaptation and to fix infrastructure affected by climate change. In addition to those impacts and costs, Northern premiers noted that all three territories are doing their part and have taken significant actions towards emissions reduction, cleaner energy production, technology and innovation.

Recognizing the significant effect climate change is having on northern communities, territorial premiers reiterated their commitment to address climate change. In fact, the three territories have already launched a Pan-Territorial Adaptation Strategy and are taking actions to reduce their environmental footprints.

"A carbon tax doesn't work in the North. Instead of imposing a made-in-the-South tax on Northerners, Canada should work collaboratively with the territories to help us implement climate solutions that reflect the realities of Northern communities," Yukon Premier Darrell Pasloski said. "We as territorial premiers must ensure the economic impacts of our climate solutions create jobs, not kill jobs."

Northern premiers want to ensure that detailed economic assessments are completed on any new national initiatives on climate change, including analysis specifically on possible impacts to territorial economies and Northern families.

"A national carbon pricing strategy could not be viable in the NWT unless it alleviates or compensates for the high cost of living and doing business in the North," Northwest Territories Premier Bob MacLeod said. "Until there are economically-viable alternatives, carbon pricing mechanisms will not significantly reduce greenhouse gas emissions in the NWT."

"A national approach to a proposed carbon tax has to take into account the unique nature of our Northern territories. Nunavut is already the most expensive place to live and do business anywhere in Canada," said Nunavut Premier Peter Taptuna.

Little Gold and Silver Canoes a coveted Award for Solo Racers

Story and Photos
by Josée Bonhomme

Andrew Kuczynski is a Master Jeweller with much talent and heart. In Poland, Kuczynski's homeland, it takes fully six years to complete three years of apprenticeship, plus three years of mastering. An exam must be passed to achieve the Mastership recognition to be a jeweller.

After 42 years in the trade, he says, "I am still learning, making new designs, trying different styles, gems or stones, adapting to market tastes and trends." He says this while working incessantly, this time on an elegant new and original ring design. Jewellery making is definitely an art, one "creates" pieces, to be worn by lucky, proud persons. There is also a complicated technical side, knowing how to work with different precious metals, stones and gems, it's almost like a small welding enterprise with an added "de rigueur" degree in Geology.

The occupation of goldsmith, silversmith, lasts year-round for Alexandra and Andrew Kuczynski. After a busy summer in Dawson, with two stores to supply with different appeal points for our varied market, the Kuczynskis retreat to Britannia Beach on the Sea to Sky Highway, north of Vancouver. That store is called "Gold Trail Jewellers", the two local stores in Dawson are "Gold Trail Jewellers" and "The Rock" (big rock outside, can't miss it, and the building is YELLOW, on Perpetual motion helps create solid silver and gold canoes to recognize the top three paddlers in three solo classes. The canoes are engraved with "YRQ" with the year of the race. They are mounted on chains, to be worn proudly.

Front Street). Andrew works all winter to supply all three stores for the busy seasons, creating and growing.

Andrew makes little canoe replica pendants for the top three solo finishers for three classes in the Yukon River Quest: canoeing (sitting on the gunwales), C-1 (kneeling in a canoe), and K-1 (kayak, legs extended with pedals, much more comfortable, and safe). When asked why he chose that event to sponsor, he humbly and thoughtfully replies: "Our new store was at the finish line in 2007, and these athletes would wander into the shop, looking happy and healthy. They were not the Arnold Schwarzeneggers I expected. I was impressed with everyone's courage, the strength and skills required for such an epic event. The average age of competitors also struck me, and that's when I met Ingrid Wilcox.

She was in her sixties I think, a little woman, not humongous, but fit, and she managed to beat all those athletic guys in a kayak! At that point, I was so inspired by Wilcox's efforts, I decided to help in recognizing all point athletes' outstanding performance.

The awards are solid gold canoes for first place, with gold chains, silver canoes with gold nuggets for second place, and solid silver canoes for third place. It's our seventh year now supporting the race. I am thinking I should do this till I die, or go out of business... whichever comes first. It's important. For example, Ingrid Wilcox has more than one such awards."

A sample of the solid gold and silver canoes is shown in the photo (top right). Andrew's hands were working fast when working on one of those, but you can see it's a work of love, and dexterity, with an added touch of talent and advanced design. A complicated process, indeed.

Government, hospital collaborate to increase access to continuing care/acute care beds

Press Release

WHITEHORSE (July 18) —Working together, the Government of Yukon, the Yukon Hospital Corporation, doctors and nurses have developed a plan to address hospital bed shortages.

This plan, developed collectively, will free up hospital beds, create 10 new continuing-care beds, and alleviate staffing challenges. It will reduce pressures on the hospital, staff and patients while the new Whistle Bend facility is under construction. The Yukon government is budgeting up to $5 million for the plan.

"All parties have been working diligently on ways to alleviate the increased demands on both the hospital and on continuing-care beds," Premier Darrell Pasloski said today. "The Whistle Bend facility is the long-term solution. Taking these steps will improve the situation until the time that vital facility is up and running."

Yukon's 193 continuing-care beds are full, and individuals who cannot be maintained at home through Home Care Services have been accessing hospital beds. This has resulted in some postponed surgeries and increased pressure on hospital staff, as a significant number of acute-care beds are occupied by patients awaiting placement in long-term care.

Minister of Health and Social Services Mike Nixon said the partners have identified five key areas that will improve the situation for all.

"We are immediately increasing home care, with greater support available on evenings and weekends to augment hours of complex care," Nixon said. "In addition, continuing-care staff will now supplement care and support to long-term care patients in hospital through programming. These changes will better enable hospital staff to focus on acute-care patients."

The biggest aid will be the reopening of a 10-bed unit in Thomson Centre currently occupied by departmental and hospital staff.

"Relocation of staff will begin immediately," Nixon added. "The space does require minor renovations, and we anticipate that these beds will be available for occupancy by October."

"We welcome the government's commitment and support as we work to ensure Yukoners receive the best possible care," Yukon Hospital Corporation Board of Trustees chair Craig Tuton said. "For our team, these are significant measures because we can expect to see a reduction in the next three months in the number of patients in hospital awaiting long-term care, and the opening of additional continuing care beds in two years will bring us to a more manageable level on an ongoing basis."

The Yukon government has also committed to helping WGH create four 'holding beds.' This measure does not increase number of beds, but does mean fewer patients are held in emergency while awaiting admission for treatment and recovery.

The Government of Yukon opened Birch Lodge in fall 2015, adding 10 beds to continuing care; the opening of the new McDonald Lodge in Dawson increased the bed count there by four, from 11 to 15.

The new 150-bed continuing care facility in Whistle Bend will open in early 2018.

The Klondike Mines Railway re-opens in Dawson

Story and Photos
By Dan Davidson

The Klondike Mines Railway (KMR) began operations at the Visitors Information Centre (VIC) on Front Street on July 19.

Well, that's not quite right. What was revealed, after the brief ribbon cutting ceremony, was about half of the reconstructed KMR that Dr. Brian Pate and a dedicated group of model railway enthusiasts have been building in the basement of his North Vancouver home for the last two decades.

The KMR operated in the early heyday of the Klondike Gold Fields, between 1905 and 1913, after which the corporate mining era's dredges reduced the need for such a service. In all, there were 31 miles of track when the railway shut down and its engines were put into storage.

Several of them are on display in the train shelter beside the Dawson City Museum.

Aside from his former day job as a nuclear physicist researcher with the University of British Columbia, Pate has been a dedicated model maker, and took an interest in things Klondike after his daughter, Sue Dragoman, moved here with her husband, Clair, in the late 1980s.

His first project was an award winning Model of Dredge No. 4, which currently resides in the main room of the VIC. An account of his 1994 triumph can be found in the October, 1994, edition of National Model Railroad's Seventh Division Bulletin Board, online at: <http://www.7divpnr.ca/sites/default/files/Bulletin%20Board/1994/1994%20October%20BB-rotated.pdf>.

After that, he began work on the KMR project. His version assumes that the line did not shut down in 1913, but continued operations as had been planned out to 1949. While Pate earlier donated his Dredge model to the VIC, the KMR project has come to Dawson because Pate has moved to smaller quarters and no longer has space for it.

The completed model is far too large to be able to fit in the available space at the VIC, so Dawson has inherited about half of the line, including the town's waterfront re-creation, Klondike City, Bear Creek and part of the goldfields. Several of Pate's model railroad comrades made a couple of trips to Dawson to assemble the display and get it ready to run.

"It's a fantastic model of one of Dawson's most overlooked historic periods," said Museum Executive Director Alex Somerville, as he assembled the partners in the relocation project for a ribbon cutting ceremony.

"This model risked destruction, like most model train layouts actually do. They are someone's life's work and then they end up in the local dump. This one is so special, and Dr. Pate is a victim of the spell of the Klondike."

Pate's friends managed to disassemble it from its basement home, crate it, ship it, and carefully reassemble it in the VIC.

Gary Parker, who was still the Executive Director of the Klondike Visitors Association (KVA) until late in June, noted that getting the KMR to Dawson wasn't really a project that anyone had in mind when the possibility first came up, but that various stakeholders – YTG's Tourism Dept., Parks Canada, the KVA, and the Dawson City Museum – came together to make it work.

"Using up all the puns," he said, "we got everybody on board, didn't let the project derail, and now it's full steam ahead."

The following link is to a website that describes the project in lots of detail: <http://www3.telus.net/KMR/>.

This YouTube video, made in 2015, shows the entire project in operation, on a ride in 2008 that take about 25 minutes to watch. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=r6NTJtVQRmI>

Mother-Daughter Team Creates a Colouring Book for Adults

By Dan Davidson
Photos supplied

Colouring books for adults are all the rage these days. This sort of project is not exactly what Elaine Henderson had in mind years ago when she encouraged her daughter, Kiley, to develop her talents as an artist, but it is what the mother-daughter team spent the winter creating, while Elaine was living with Kiley in Magrath, near Lethbridge.

It was Elaine's first winter out of the Yukon in many years and it wasn't too long before she returned to a theme her daughter had heard a lot while she was growing up.

"When I was a kid," Kiley recalled, "she was always telling me that I should do a colouring book as early as Grade 4. I had actually started working on one (in high school, years later). I had maybe 14 pages done and then I got bored."

Elaine is a painter and sculptor herself, in addition to her day job as a custodial worker, an occupation that her daughter also shares, so it was no wonder she kept encouraging the art, and brought it up again while she was staying there.

Kiley pulled out the material she had in storage, and one thing led to another. None of that original material, aimed more for children, made it into the final product.

Raven's Colours -Taiga, is a 41 page spiral-bound colouring book (so it can lie flat) printed on 70 pound paper, so that the finished product can look really good.

Elaine says the idea is to use pencil crayons, but she could see people doing the one-sided pages with markers or perhaps even water colours. The detail in the book does resemble that provided in paint-by-number kits to a certain extent.

It was a true collaboration, with Kiley drawing the animals and birds and Elaine providing the appropriate habitat for each creature. The Taiga biome is the world's largest terrestrial biome covering areas across North America and Eurasia, and so the 41 animals and birds come from all across Canada and northern Eurasia stopping just below the Arctic zone.

The creation of the book was a lot more work than either of them had thought it would be. They'd intended to finish it in time for possible Christmas sales, but at anywhere from ten to 20 hours per page, it took longer than that.

Kiley would provide the creature, showing it doing something interesting. Then Elaine would lay tracing paper over the image and experiment with various habitats until she got something that was accurate and looked good.

Each of them went through a number of traced layers until they got what they wanted. Then a light box allowed Kiley to combine everything into one final drawing.

"Both people had to be happy with it," she said. "When we took it to the printer, we had an original that was exactly how we wanted the page to look."

"This collaboration allows us to provide a book where every page has received the utmost attention and thought," said Elaine. "Colouring can not only provide some much needed stress release and fun, but Raven's Colours is a high quality book that may also evolve your artistic abilities should you want some extra challenge!" The pair have promoted the book on their Facebook page (<https://www.facebook.com/Ravenscolour>) where they have also displayed some colour pages that fans of the book have emailed to them. It is listed on the Indigo/Chapters website as being available in certain stores and it is available through Amazon.

If sales are good enough to make back the printing costs, they have another volume already in mind.

SAFETY CORNER

"Rollin', rollin', rollin'...
keep them dogies rollin'..."

Cool & Shaded

During the extended sunlight this summer, it's important to protect your eyes from the sun. For most people, a pair of sunglasses will do the job.

All light is a form of energy and when your eyes absorb light, the process creates heat or chemical reactions in eye tissue. Ultraviolet radiation or UV rays carry more energy than visible light rays. The lens of your eyes absorbs UVA rays, the cornea and the conjunctiva absorb UVB rays, and the retina absorbs visible light. If eyes are overexposed to UV rays they are at risk of permanent damage.

Wearing sunglasses can help to minimize your risk. Properly chosen sunglasses will protect your eyes against damage from UV rays. Wearing a wide-brimmed hat or visor will also help.

We at Victoria Gold encourage you to 'think safety' and choose sunglasses that offer protection against UVA and UVB rays, and always wear them when out in bright sunlight.

Victoria Gold Corp. plans to construct, operate, and close the Eagle Gold Project located northeast of Mayo, in the Dublin Gulch claims region. Heritage Trail opens on the site of the Ridge Road

BY DAN DAVIDSON
Sun Staff

The very first public road ever built in the Yukon got a new lease on life on June 13, restored to use as a hiking trail after nearly 94 years of abandonment.

More than a hundred people, visitors and locals, were assembled at the site of McCarty's Roadhouse at noon on July 13 to celebrate the opening of the Ridge Road Heritage Trail, a 32 kilometre hiking path which runs along the ridge between the creeks from its high point at the roadhouse site to Jackson Gulch, just shy of the Klondike Highway.

The Whitehorse Cadet Pipe Band was there to help lend some pomp and circumstance to the event along with a Red Serged Const. Cory Hoehn and his somewhat dusty mount. Justin. The Percy de Wolfe Race committee catered the salmon and steak barbecue, held under gloomy, drizzly skies that didn't clear up until just before the ribbon cutting ceremony.

MC Denny Kobayashi apologized to tourist visitors for the weather: "For those of you that thought this is regular weather for this time of the year in July, we can tell you that it is unseasonably cold for us as well, so we're as blue and as suffering as you are."

For once Craig Battersby, encased in his costume as Dalton, the dall sheep mascot for the Yukon Anniversaries Commission, had something to be grateful for. Under layers of foam and fur, he was the warmest person on the hill.

The Ridge Road Heritage Trail project sprang from a 20 year old idea of John Gould's (see accompanying story), Kobayashi told his audience, and was helped to fruition by many groups and people, including Heritage Branch, Renewable Resources, Y2C2 student workers, the Dawson City Museum, Lotteries Yukon, the Arctic Environmental Strategy, the Yukon Foundation and the Northern Research Institute.

Speaking on behalf of the Klondike Centennials Society, which got this project under way, Sally Robinson gave some of the road's background. It was the first territorial road in Yukon, built to provide a dry trail above the swamps in the valley. Proposed in 1898, it was built in 1899, and used for only a few years before being largely abandoned in 1902, its purpose being supplanted by miners roads in the valleys and the later construction of the Klondike Mines Railway.

John Gould, the hiking trail's godfather, gave a brief talk on the road's origins.

"The trail itself was very controversial. Many of the miners didn't want it up here and they argued and fought over getting it here."

In the Klondike Nugget of 1899 Gould found the story of a miner named C.W. Tennent, who counted the number of footsteps it took to use either the "government wagon road", as he termed it, or the creek road.

He said the creek road was an hour shorter to travel, being about 8,000 of his steps shorter. The trail was, he said, a "delusion and a snare". He claimed the descent from the ridge to the claims was impractical and that the miners were building their own road, "notwithstanding that they have already contributed in taxes to the wagon road on the ridge which they cannot use."

Gould thanked Sally Robinson, Greg Skuce and Barb Hogan for the vast amounts of research and physical work they had done over the years to develop the trail.

Once he had cut the ribbon, guests were free to take advantage of the newly cleared trail. Const. Hoehn and Justin led the way, followed by a group on foot. Others caught a free ride from the Klondike Carriage Company, courtesy of owner Donny Wilson.

Just before the ribbon cutting the sun decided to come out.

Liberals want partnerships in bridge building

WHITEHORSE - Yukon Liberal Party Leader Ken Taylor announced that a Yukon Liberal Party government would issue a proposal call for the construction of a bridge across the Yukon River at Dawson in the first year of its mandate.

"A Yukon Liberal government would invite proposals on the basis of a public - private sector partnership. Our government would offer the capital costs of upgrading the ferry plus the annual maintenance of the ferry as its contribution to the project. We anticipate that other partners could become involved in the project and that other sources of capital could be accessed," Taylor said.

A report prepared for the Department of Community and Transportation Services estimates the cost of building the bridge at between $19.5 and $25 million including contingencies, depending on the bridge type.

"Public - private sector partnership is an innovative approach to building infrastructure that has been used successfully in other provinces, most notably in the construction of the fixed link bridge to Prince

Will Jenkins run for the Yukon Party?

The Liberal Party may be campaigning at top speed in Dawson City, but the other two territorial parties have yet to hold their local constituency meetings.

The only thing that's sure is that David Millar isn't running. Millar broke that news in an interview with former Sun reporter Timothy Sawa in the Yukon News on July 12, citing the desire to spend more time with his growing family as one of his prime considerations.

Millar also indicated in that interview that he felt former mayor Peter Jenkins would be a natural standard-bearer for the Yukon Party and that he would support Jenkins should he choose to run.

It took about a week for the Whitehorse Star's Karan Smith to catch up with Jenkins and put the question to him. The story published in the July 18th issue of the Star says that Jenkins has indicated he will be a contender in the election, but that he hadn't decided under what banner he will contend.

Jenkins is a member of the Yukon Party, which may come as a surprise to those who used to hear him rip the government to shreds when he sat in the mayor's chair. When he last ran for MLA it was as a member of the Yukon Progressive Conservative Party, which later became the Yukon Party.

If he were to run as an independent it would certainly dent the party's chances of holding on to the seat. And Gov't Leader John Ostashek knows this. In speeches around the territory he has been warning party faithful to recruit the independents.

Rumours have been flying for months that Jenkins had a shopping list if the Yukon Party was interested in having him as a candidate. No details have emerged, but any such list would certainly include the concerns that characterized his terms as mayor, such as a second school, a bridge, and improved airport facilities.

The Sun obtained funding in late 2009 from the City of Dawson, YTG's Heritage Branch and the Community Development Fund to conserve and archive early issues and make them available once again in the public domain. This is a great resource for students, writers and historians, and also for prospective tourists with an interest in Dawson City's life. Scots of the Yukon, Part 1: The Writers

By James A. McQuiston

In 2007, while traveling to Dawson City, Yukon, and on into Alaska, I was struck by the great number of significant mentions made of Scottish names. I discovered that the twenty-five years preceding the Klondike Gold Rush saw Scots involved in many aspects of Yukon River life through gold mining and the fur trade, and also through transportation improvements and community building. Many of these Scots have had their accomplishments buried with the passage of time, and through the overshadowing of Klondike-mania.

I was in Dawson to carry out research for a book I wrote on the only man ever to be called Father of the Yukon. The actual book title is Captain Jack: Father of the Yukon, available on Amazon and elsewhere.

What I learned while researching Captain Jack is that men of Scottish descent drove much of the Yukon River Gold Rush, one of the most romantic periods in North American history. This discovery has led me to the conclusion that Scots played one of the most significant roles in the exploration of the Yukon River Valley. In support of this conclusion I present three important proofs – they being authors, landmarks, and discoveries.

Let's begin with four famous Yukon Gold Rush authors.

The confluence of the Yukon River and the Klondike River was ground zero in a phenomenon that has seen millions of dollars in gold being discovered, even today. Facing the juncture of these two famous rivers stands a large stone with a brass plaque mounted to it – a plaque dedicated to the only man to ever be called "Father of the Yukon." Even First Nations members in this area referred to him as "Injun Papa."

Jack McQuesten

His name was Leroy Napoleon McQuesten, known by family and friends as Captain Jack.

Captain Jack McQuesten wrote one of the earliest accounts of life along the Yukon River during its period of discovery and settlement. His book is entitled Recollections, and the original hand-written pages are held by the Yukon Archives in Whitehorse, Canada.

McQuesten's name appears in a book by Duncan Bruce, entitled The Mark of the Scots. His story has been told in two separate issues of Highlander magazine, and he has even been immortalized as the inspiration for the whiskey known as Yukon Jack®.

During my stay in Dawson I met with many Yukon historians. These modern-day authors arranged for the meeting because they knew that Jack's story needed to be written.

Our group met in the shadows of the gold-mining cabin of American author Jack London. Nearby, stood the home of the great Yukon poet, Robert Service, and the home of the premier Yukon historian, Pierre Berton. There could be no way for me to be more immersed in the history of the Great White North except perhaps to have been a gold-miner there, during that famous era.

Captain Jack spent twenty-five years along the Yukon pursuing the theory that – "When everyone else is digging for gold, be the one selling the shovels."

He grubstaked a great number of the miners of that era, including the man who made the famous Klondike discovery. He skippered nearly every early steamboat on the Yukon River, and recorded the very first weather records of the Yukon for Edward Nelson of the Smithsonian Institution – records that appeared in an early issue of National Geographic Magazine. Jack obtained over 200 bird and animal specimens for the Smithsonian and established Fort Nelson in honor of this explorer. In just one of his many mentions of Jack, Nelson writes, "To Mr. L. N. McQuesten I am under obligations for many specimens from the Upper Yukon."

Captain Jack was well-thought of by nearly everyone he met, including Jack London, who received many of his tales of the North directly from McQuesten. London mentions the McQuesten name in four novels and four short stories, including his very first novel ever, called A Daughter Of The Snows, as well as in his best selling novel of all time, entitled Burning Daylight, and in Call Of The Wild, the book that made him world famous.

In Burning Daylight, London speaks of Jack McQuesten as one of the most significant men in the Yukon. He also states, in another essay entitled Gold Hunters of the North, that: "In 1898 the writer met Jack McQuesten at Minook on the Lower Yukon. The old pioneer, though grizzled, was hale and hearty, and as optimistic as when he first journeyed into the land along the path of the Circle. And no man more beloved is there, in all the North. There will be great sadness there when his soul goes questing on over the Last Divide – 'farther north,' perhaps – who can tell?"

Jack London is most credited with bringing the story of Yukon life to the general public. Many scholars of this man believe his true father to be William Chaney. Chaney is, of course, a well-known Scottish name. This particular Chaney was an astrologer who impregnated London's mother and then asked her to abort the child. She refused, and he disavowed any connection to Jack London, who later took the surname of his stepfather, John London.

Like London, Jack McQuesten's father was also named John. And like William Chaney, Jack McQuesten descended from William McQuesten who immigrated to America from Scotland.

This pair of Jacks had much in common. It has been said that they left the Yukon together on the same freighter. They moved to within ten miles of each other, and London attended writing classes at the University of California at Berkeley, located only one and a half miles from Jack McQuesten's home.

Evidence shows that London received inspiration and actual stories from McQuesten over a period of years. He did not publish any Yukon stories until he had moved close to McQuesten in California. London even based at least two short stories directly on the persona of Captain Jack.

Some of London's tales are slightly adjusted retellings of stories that Captain Jack had already written in his own diary of his days along the big river. For instance, in Call Of The Wild London tells how the hero-dog Buck mercifully kills a bear whose eyes had been ravaged by insects. This same story was considered one of Jack McQuesten's favorite tales, only in his true-to-life version the bear was put out of its misery by his own partners Mickey O'Brien and Joe Ladue. This is only one example of the memories of Jack McQuesten becoming the stories of Jack London.

If it was London's intent to write tales of life on the Yukon River, he could find no man more qualified to help him than the gold rush millionaire, Captain Jack McQuesten.

While in the Yukon, Jack London carved his name in the gold-mining cabin where he was staying. He wrote on a log in the back of the cabin, "Jack London, Miner, Author, Jan. 27, 1898." In the 1940's, Jack MacKenzie (the last man to deliver mail by dogsled in the Yukon) cut the signature out of the wall. Later, Dick North facilitated moving part of the cabin to Dawson City and served as director of Jack London's Cabin and Interpretive Centre, there.

I was lucky enough to meet Mr. North before he passed away, and listened to many of his tales of the Yukon, including stories of Jack London and Jack McQuesten.

Another very significant

author of Yukon life was the poet Robert Service. Service was born of a Scottish family. His father was a banker from Kilwinning, Scotland, who had been transferred to England. At age five the poet was sent back to Scotland to live with his paternal grandfather. He attended Glasgow's Hillhead High School and afterwards joined the Commercial Bank of Scotland, which would later become the Royal Bank of Scotland. Eventually, he left for North America, and after much travel he found himself living in Dawson City, Yukon, and becoming known as the "Bard of the Yukon."

Two of his most famous poems are about Scotsmen, they being "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" and "The Cremation of Sam McGee."

It has been noted that Service would have had a tough time earning a living through writing poetry, while living amongst a group of hard-nosed miners in the middle of nowhere. In fact, before heading to the Yukon, Service again entered the banking business through employment with the Canadian Bank of Commerce, which had branches in Whitehorse and Dawson, Yukon. The Canadian bank had, as its agent in Scotland, the Bank of Scotland, which is said to be the oldest bank in Scotland. The Canadian Bank of Commerce was founded by the Scots-blooded William McMaster, whose family had come to America from Scotland by way of a stop in Northern Ireland. McMaster's first wife was a Henderson and his second, a Fraser, two more Scottish family names.

Only a few short years before Captain Jack McQuesten headed to the Yukon, the Canadian Bank of Commerce came under the control of the Merchant's Bank of Canada – a bank founded by Sir Hugh Allan, born at Saltcoats, Ayrshire, Scotland. Allan's wife was the Scots-blooded Jean Crawford, his first cousin was the Scotsman Sir Alexander Galt, one of the premier fathers of the Canadian Confederation, and his first cousin, one generation removed, was the famous Scottish poet Robbie Burns.

Allan's bank had close ties with the Royal Bank of Scotland, showing that there was a definite Scottish force behind the financing of the Yukon Gold Rush, including at least some connections to both the Royal Bank of Scotland and the Bank of Scotland, along with several influential Scottish families. Robert Service, having been employed by both banks, seems possibly to have been the perfect "front man" to keep an eye on Scottish-led banking interests in the gold fields, while outwardly carrying on his "occupation" as a poet.

Finally, Pierre Berton, in his lifetime, was named the most famous man in Canada. He spent much of his childhood in Dawson City and spent his life writing books and producing documentaries on Canadian history, especially the Yukon Gold Rush.

Berton's mother also became famous for her book I Married The Klondike. She moved to Dawson as a schoolteacher, where she married Pierre's father. Her maiden name was Thompson and she, too, was Scottish.

All four of these important Yukon authors had Scottish blood in their veins. Jack McQuesten's book Recollections, along with Jack London's books and short stories, Robert Service's poems, and Pierre Berton's histories, together make up some of the best information of that era and region available, even today.

In more modern times, three great storytellers of the Yukon are dear friends of mine, and all have Scottish blood in their veins. Ed Jones, along with his wife Star, are two of the most sought-after researchers and historians of the Yukon, having lived for 25 years on an island in the middle of the Yukon River, near Dawson. They have been associated with the area for 50 years while writing several significant reports for both the Alaskan and Yukon governments. Ed is of part Scottish-blood and actually spoke Gaelic as a child.

Pierre Berton wrote the foreword for Ed and Star Jones' book All That Glitters, about the founding of Dawson City. Ed and Star wrote the foreword for my book on Captain Jack.

Next is Rod Perry, the premier historian of the Iditarod dog sled races. Rod filed the very first news release on this famous race many years ago and has written a two-volume set of the history of the race, Trailblazers, which is now being made into a documentary. Rod is of Scots blood as is our next modern author, Cass Wright, an avid dog musher and author of many Scottish clan histories, who has fed me stories of Captain Jack that he had heard, first-hand, in saloons along the Yukon, while purchasing Malamute sled dogs.

I join with these three great Scots-blooded authors in keeping trying to keep alive the Scottish influence in the recording of Yukon River history.

To be continued in future issues.
