Sharing Traditions and Making Memories at the 2016 Moosehide Gathering

Photos By Dan Davidson Story By Jen Laliberte

As readers who have been fortunate enough to attend any Moosehide Gathering will know, it is a powerful event, rich in traditions and culture, and rooted in relationships and sharing. During the bi-annual Moosehide Gathering, the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in nation welcomes people from all over to the village of Moosehide to share, learn, and gain an understanding of the traditions of song, dance, story, harvesting from the land and potlatch feasting that are the foundation of Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in worldview.

This year's Gathering was characteristically profound and impressive, drawing diverse talent in performers from all across Turtle Island, hosting some of the North's finest dance/drum/singing groups and showcasing the generosity of Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in people and land.

Moosehide Gathering 2016 was a vibrant, diverse, and exceptional event, organized with the knowledge, guidance, and support of Angie Joseph-Rear, Chief Roberta Joseph, Marion Roberts, Doris Roberts, Julia Morberg, Doreen Olsen, Peggy Kormendy, and Victor Henry (who was honoured at this year's Moosehide Gathering for his role as a Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Elder who gives freely to the community his knowledge, time, enthusiasm, and spirit), as well as the endless hours of work and planning spent by countless Elders, youth, citizens, staff, and volunteers from TH and other organizations. William Greenland emceed again this year, and his connection to Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in always lends a welcoming tone.

There was a full docket of hands-on workshops and demos, including sheep horn spoonmaking, beading, fish scale art, traditional medicine, and music and songwriting. An active and engaging kid's area, vendor booths, various lectures and talks, and really fun traditional Handgames provided endless opportunities to explore and connect.

Moosehide Gathering potlatch feasts are almost indescribably good. Lead feast cook Andrea Moses and her team served an amazing spread of traditional foods including moose (roast, ribs, heart, and nose), salmon, and vegetables from the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Farm.

It was a bustling Gathering this year, with thousands of attendees. Moosehide Gathering Coordinator Eryn Foster estimates over 2,000 people visited Moosehide on the Saturday of the Gathering, which she notes is more than Dawson City's year-round population. For Foster, who had not attended Moosehide Gathering since her first once back in 1994, the expansion of activities, performances, and visitors was dramatic.

One of the most exciting new initiatives at the 2016 Gathering, Foster says, was the inclusion of sign-language interpreters for deaf visitors to the Gathering. Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in citizen Clarence Barber spearheaded the initiative and contact Eryn and her team to see if it would be possible. Through support from YG, Moosehide Gathering had two sign language interpreters/translators present; there were approximately a dozen deaf visitors able to directly benefit.

Foster describes comments from Gathering attendees who were able to converse with Elders and participate in components of the event previously unavailable to them. "It's a great example of how a small initiative can have a great impact," she says, and hopes this idea continues to grow, allowing more diverse attendance and participation within the deaf community in Yukon and beyond.

Foster was also deeply moved by Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in citizen Roy Johnson's organization of the reading of the United Nations Declarations for Indigenous Peoples. Each declaration was read by a different individual, some from Dawson and others from elsewhere in Canada, the US, and international nations. Roy's deep dedication to this project and the beautiful delivery of the readings was a highlight of the weekend for Foster, who assures us she did find time to relax, visit, and take in some performances during the Gathering, thanks in part to Trainee Coordinator Leah McLeod and Assistant Coordinator Sandra Gordon's skills and competence.

Music and dance performances give the heartbeat to weekend. This year's Gathering had a great mix of traditional and modern performers. The Delta Goodtime Band, Dani and Lizzy, Boyd Benjamin & Kevin Barr, Jerry Alfred Shun Dun, Richard Gelardin, and Bill Stevens provided a fun and danceable array of musical styles to suit every taste and rhythm. Traditional groups featured at this year's Gathering included: Dághàalhaan K'e, Selkirk Spirit Dancers, Kaska Dena Drummers, Dakwäkäda Dancers, Dakhká Khwáan Dancers, Miracle Drummers and Dancers, Northway Dancers, and Tanacross Drummers & Dancers. What an amazing showcase of the cultural richness of the North.

And of course Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in's own Hän Singers performed beautifully, this year with a particularly large presence as some Alaskan Hän relatives joined in. The 2016 Moosehide Gathering had a strong Alaskan presence, which is extremely significant given some of the Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Hän nation's closest relatives hail from that side of the border. The US/Canada border is also meaningful for the history of the Hän people, and indeed Indigenous people all over North America.

At the end of the 19th century, the Gold Rush transformed what we now know as the Yukon Territory, shortly after the US had purchased Alaska from Russia; rather suddenly Hän Traditional Territory was divided by an imaginary line. This caused great sadness and disruption of course, and Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Elders describe everyone meeting at Moosehide for a final potlatch before the boundary would divide them, and mourning afterwards because they feared they'd never see one another again once the border was put in.

Yukon and Alaska people were able to stay in contact, but the way they were able to connect was changed. A series of letters circa 1910 between church, government, and school officials in Dawson City, Yukon and Eagle, Alaska, express the desire for the people to come back together. Though RNWMP Inspector T.A. Wroughton recognized in his letters that the Eagle people and the Moosehide people, along with others along the Yukon River "are more or less connected by blood and mutual customs, and freely mix with one another," the borders blocked the way Indigenous people had freely travelled, interacted, feasted, and visited since very old times.

The 2016 Moosehide

Gathering featured several Alaskan drumming and dance groups, honouring the potlatch traditions of Athabascan nations along the Yukon River and tion at this year's Moosehide helping to re-establish connections. Visitors from Eagle are always a very special event, and by a group of carvers led by this year a group travelled from Tlingit Master Carver Wayne the Eagle side of the border to celebrate, share, and reminisce with Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in relatives and friends. As the only other Hän-speaking people, Eagle and Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in people have a deep ancestral bond. It was really special to see families coming together and having visits, meeting other family members and friends, and enjoying and celebrating at Moosehide.

Another Alaskan connec-Gathering came in the form of a dugout canoe, crafted in 2009 Price from Haines, Alaska. The Healing Canoe arrived on July 28 just as the Gathering was getting started. As it pulled up to the banks at Moosehide, the Hän Singers greeted the paddlers with a full welcome. It was a beautiful and meaningful event.

nizer William Carlick explained that such a journey—a coastal dugout canoe traveling the Yukon River all the way from Whitehorse to Moosehide—had not happened in over 100 years, since pre-Gold Rush times. This reclamation of tradition in craft, transportation, and gathering represents Carlick's vision for a healing journey of reconciliation, togetherness, and understanding.

Carlick began planning for the trip in the spring, and with the backing of Kwanlin Dün and many other stakeholders and supporters, he and his crew of paddlers made the vision a reality. The group included paddlers from all four directions, representing First Nation, European, Asian, and African ancestries and further achieving Carlick's concept of reconciliation, healing, and understanding.

Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in Chief Roberta Joseph welcomed the group and commended them for their "meaningful strong journey." The arrival of the Healing Canoe started the 2016 Moosehide Gathering with a profound feeling of togetherness, strength, and tradition. This was William Carlick's first ever trip to the Moosehide Gathering, and it was important to him to attend "as a real participant" in the event, a contributor rather than just a spectator; that was how Moosehide Gathering became the perfect destination for this special journey.

By looking back to ancestral knowledge and teaching, new ideas and strengths emerge and empower. The 2016 Moosehide Gathering was an incredible example of the generosity, passion, and resilience of Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in and all their relations. Mähsi Cho for having us.

OPINON Uffish Thoughts: Donald Trump Picks the Nuclear Option for ISIS Consequences (a corollary of

By Dan Davidson

It amazes me that Donald Trump, barely a week after the annual memorials commemorating the dropping of nuclear bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, could candidly contemplate attacking the rather geographically nebulous Islamic State, in order to put an end to that problem.

According to numerous reports in the press, Trump has, during the course of the briefings that he has been provided as part of the services given to any potential president once the two parties have chosen their candidates, asked a number of times why such weapons aren't being used.

The United States is pretty much regularly on the record as saying that it will not be the First nation to launch a nuclear strike, but that doesn't seem to matter to The Donald.

Apparently the man, whose temperament seems to be permanently locked in attack mode, has not been able to absorb the concept of the nuclear arsenal as a deterrent weapon. Nor does he seem to recall the doctrine of Mutual Assured Destruction (appropriately given the acronym MAD) that did manage to keep the superpowers from triggering the fictional scenario which made the last minutes of Kubrik's film "Dr. Strangelove" so chilling.

Picture Slim Pickens riding that nuke down to somewhere in The USSR, screaming "Yahooo!" and waving that cowboy hat. Then Photoshop in Trump in a suit, tie flapping in the wind, waving one of those made-in-China "Make America Great Again" truckers' caps, and see if that thought doesn't chill your blood.

Trump is unlike so many other candidates. Most of them worry about making one fatal mistake on their way to the party convention. A few years ago, a somewhat promising fellow lost all hope of being a candidate when he broke out into resounding "yee-haaw" at a rally. The video and audio went viral and he was soon heard from no more. In fact, I can't even recall his name at this point.

Trump tells his followers to rough up protestors at his rallies and promises to cover their legal fees if they will be his thugs. He makes so many outrageous statements in the run of a day that it's quite impossible to keep up with him. By the time the news media have fact checked a "pants-on-fire" utterance (as PoitiFact.com likes to call them) he's moved on to four or five

It started years ago, when he was a leader in the Birther movement that kept trying to prove that Obama was born in Kenya, not Hawaii. Of course, the man who insisted that a siting president (twice elected) needed to be able to produce a birth certificate, now refuses to do what all candidates for the office have done in the last nearly half a century, and release his tax records.

What are we to make of his repeated assertion that Obama, along with Clinton, was the founder of ISIS? It is pretty clear that ISIS is one of the Unforeseen Consequences (a corollary of Murphy's Law) of George Bush II's invasion of Iraq, otherwise known as The Search of the WMDs that Never Were.

Quizzed quite thoroughly about this statement, which he has repeated numerous times since the first time he said it, Trump held to it in spite of harsh questions by some fairly conservative commentators who might normally have been expected to be friendly towards him. Even they had a problem with a total fiction.

His comments to one of them were quite revealing. I can't quote him precisely, but he basically said that he was going to keep using that line because it was popular with the people at his rallies. This sounds a bit like a failing stand-up comic who knows that, if all else fails, a bit of vulgar language will get him or her a nervous laugh.

But then, the very next day, he endeavoured to spin it all away by claiming that he was simply being sarcastic, and that the media were picking on him when they didn't have the wit to understand when he was joking.

Finally, I have to note that editorial writers and humorists are having a hard time writing parodies of Trump's speaking style. Recent columns by Adam Borowitz in the New York Times ("Trump Blasts Media for Reporting Things He Says", "Trump Blames Bad Poll Numbers on the Existence of Numerical system") and Robyn Urback in the National Post ("Donald Trump's Next Speech") read far too close to what the man is actually saying.

LETTER

Give credit where credit is due

Dear Editor:

I was gratified to see, in the Klondike Sun 27 July edition, your coverage of the opening of the model KMR exhibit at the Dawson Visitors' Information Centre. It is also gratifying to me personally that much of the model KMR was saved for future visitors to the VIC to enjoy.

However, I want to record that I contributed almost nothing to the saving of the model, and its transport to and installation at Dawson, since I was totally occupied with moving house. The credit for saving the model here goes to the group of my friends, who had operated the railway with me in North Vancouver for more than two decades. These are Mark Dance, Anthony Craig, Brian Dobbin, Al Lill, John Green, Rene' Gourley, Mike Chandler, Doug Hicks, Bill Dixon, Colin Dover, Gordie Mitchell, Doug Mayer and Scott Calvert.

In particular, Mark, Anthony and Brian took time out of their busy schedule to visit Dawson to do much of the installation. Then Mark and Anthony came a second time to finish it. This effort was much more than I could have asked of my friends. Without it, as you pointed out, the model KMR would have gone to the dump.

Regards,

Brian Pate bpate@telus.net

Additionally, Brad has been a member of the Canadian Rangers since 1991 and is one of a few Yukoners to participate in a High Arctic Sovereignty Patrol.

"Now more than ever, we need to stand up for the resource sector, because by standing up for mining, we are standing up for small businesses and families." Whitelaw said. KLONDIKE JOE By Terry Hynes Poetry Winner, Authors on Eighth,

I'll tell you a story 'bout "Klondike Joe", One heck of a tale that few of you know. I'm sure you've all heard, or least you've been told, how Joe made his fortune by dredging for gold.

When the Great War got goin' with all of its noise, he trained up a troop of machine gunnin' boys. Joe couldn't go fighting in trenches he's told, at age Forty-seven, they said he's too old!

But Joe wanted action and after two years, left Dawson for England, confounding his peers. They made him a colonel and dressed him up fine. Then sent him to Russia, behind Kaiser's line.

He went up to Moscow, their trains were all skewed, they had no direction, their systems were crude. He set up a schedule, each engine and car; they made him a hero and gave him a star.

A little bit later ol' Joe was then told, Romania's Queen was afraid for her gold. It seems the Crown Jewels, the pride of their land, were kept in a vault now in Bolsheviks' hand.

"We beg you go back there and talk to the czars we need those Crown Jewels, and all our gold bars." Joe travelled on back to old Moscow again. 'cause they owed him a kindness for fixin' their train.

He went to the Kremlin, the man he then told. "You owe me a favour, I want the Queen's gold!" He borrowed some boxcars, an engine so fine, and with the Crown Jewels, fled south down the line.

When the Bolsheviks heard of his daring hijack, they set out to stop him and bring it all back. The first town he came to they opened up fire; he laid on the whistle and throttled it higher.

They shot up his windows and shattered the glass, Joe crouched in the engine and covered his brass. The next town they trapped him, they blocked him in tight, and Joe was arrested right there on the site.

They held him a captive in one of his cars. The Bolsheviks feared he was friends with the czars. Joe wanted to show them his old Klondike charm, so he brewed up some tea, and he promised no harm.

He laced up that tea with Rye Whiskey so neat, and well into morning, no guards on their feet. Joe borrowed a pistol from one of those guards, and found a good engine back out in the yards.

He prompted the driver to hook up his train, an' before they could stop him, he's off to Romain. Joe wouldn't give in to that Bolshevik crowd, he had those Crown Jewels and guarded them proud.

He got all those treasures back home to their Queen, and She and our Joseph were quite often seen. Now prudence dictates that I don't say much more. but there's rumours and stories that outlived the war.

Joe Whiteside Boyle went on to more fame, and did himself proudly in life's biggest game. He died and was buried on England's far shore. Then fifty years later, came back home once more.

Friends of the Klondike Corridor Staged Go Klondike Legacy Day at Bear Creek

Story and Photos by By Dan Davidson

From 1905 until 1966 Bear Creek was the industrial centre of the Yukon Consolidated Gold Corporation and home to the community of workers. and their families. that made the dredges run, repaired equipment in the largest machine shop in the north and smelted gold bullion in the Gold Room.

Some of the homes and many of the people who lived there are now in Dawson or elsewhere in the Klondike Valley, but the compound exists, mainly as a storage place for many thousands of artifacts catalogued by Parks Canada.

There was a time when there were regular tours of Bear Creek, and the Friends of the Klondike Corridor, an international non-profit organization with branches in Seattle and Whitehorse, would like to see the return of those days.

On August 7 the Friends, with the cooperation of Parks Canada, hosted Go Klondike Legacy Day at the compound, which is seldom open to the public.

Hundreds of people, both locals and tourist, turned out for the event. Parking was at a premium, and the line extended almost to the Bear Creek country residential subdivision which takes its name from the compound.

There was interpretation on the Machine Shop, the Gold Room (open to the public for the first time since its decontamination), Klondike Joe Boyle's House and the Artifact Storage building.

Seattle's GO Klondike Theatre and the Marsh Lake Youth put on four Living History presentations to skip over the decades: Martha Black and Laura Berton in 1907; Joe Boyle, King of the Klondike I 1916; A Dredge Worker in 1935; Four Youth Packing Up in 1966.

There was a Bonnie Barber Cake. There was music by Barnacle Bob. Parks staff were on hand to show people into the buildings and answer questions not covered by the presentations.

Donna Larson, the executive director of the Friends of the Klondike Corridor, explained that the group is an international association with agreements in both Canada and the United States.

"In Seattle we held a Legacy Day where we closed a downtown street in Pioneer Square and had gold panning and dog sledding and food and music."

She encouraged her audience to also visit the National Parks office in Skagway, where Friends held a Junior Ranger Day earlier. Friends is also working to preserve the Moore Bridge, the cantilever bridge on the road to Skagway, so that it can be replaced without being torn down.

"Up here we're working with Bear Creek, to see what might be feasible to make Bear Creek open more often, open sometimes, open every day, open once in a while ... we're not sure where it's going to go, but we're open to ideas."

She encouraged people to fill out a survey form available at this event and to stay tuned or make themselves available by email for another survey at some later date.

Donna and Mike Larson run Data Path Systems, an independent polling agency, out of Marsh Lake.

The weather gods smiled on Go Klondike Legacy Day, and the crowds remained thick for the whole three hour event, with Husky Bus providing a regular shuttle from Dawson for those without vehicles.

Discovery Days and the Arts Festival fill up the weekend

Photos and Story By Dan Davidson

The combination of Discovery Days events and the Yukon Riverside Arts Festival filled up the weekend between Thursday, August 11, and Sunday August 14, with the Print and Publishing Symposium and the Live Music Stage (22 performers in all) in the Waterfront Park, stretching over three days.

Events began on Thursday afternoon, with the annual Authors of Eight Literary Walking Tour on Eighth Avenue, taking in the Jack London Museum, the Robert Service Cabin and Pierre Berton House. About 46 people attended all three sites.

The Klondike Institute of Art and Culture Members Art Show opened at the Yukon School of Visual Arts gallery that evening, as part of the town-wide gallery hop that took in eleven different sites around town.

Artists' talks, the last outdoor Radio Zho of the season (courtesy of the Dänojà Zho Cultural Centre and CFYT-fm), the annual Klondike Placer Miners BBQ and lots of pool activities rounded out events on Friday.

Saturday was the busiest day, with many events adding to the weekly Farmers' and Artists' markets that have been running all summer.

There was the annual Horticultural Exhibition, celebrating the Klondike's long history of both market and decorative gardening..

At noon there was the parade, always longer and more elaborate than the smaller one on Canada Day. It led into the most formal part of the day, with speeches by local leaders, all of whom recited some aspects of the Dawson's Gold Rush beginnings.

Mayor Wayne Potoroka spoke of the "epic stampede that transformed the world.

"It raised the western hemisphere from the depths of depression, inspired artists around the planet, and posed one more challenge for the First Nations people, who had faced of a host of them in the thousands of years they've occupied this land."

He went on to say that a oneof-a-kind culture has grown up to flourish here, "where so many amazing people do remarkable things as part of their every day lives.

"This weekend has become emblematic of who we are, whether you're into the visual arts, slinging mud with your truck, playing ball, or showing off the goods from the garden, there's something for you this weekend, much like there is something, and a place for you, in this diverse, progressive, incredible community."

Klondike MLA Sandy Silver celebrated Dawson as being "alive and well and rich with culture, economic opportunity and a real sense of community."

Silver spent a large portion of his speech celebrating the history and current efforts of placer miners in the area, saying that "the backbone of our community is our placer mining families. They are multi-generational; they are volunteering for our major and our minor events; their kids are in our schools; they're in our charities and when somebody needs a hand, it's usually the placer miners who are helping out."

Tr'ondëk Hwëch'in councillor, Darren Bullen, commented on the fact that, while the Gold Rush initially disrupted the local people, an accommodation has developed over time.

"We've found a place in the mining world, with our citizens employed in the industry and the government, and forming partnerships with responsible gold mining operations.

"More importantly, our First Nation conquered the social challenges posed by the Gold Rush, in spite of the changes that embarked on our traditional territory.

"We are proud to stand together as a prominent selfgoverning First Nation, with a healthy community and leaders of the Klondike."

Member of Parliament, Larry Bagnell, welcomed everyone to the day and introduced the local, territorial and national staff that he had with him. Bagnell bubbled over with enthusiasm for everything Dawson that he could think to name after everyone else had recited all the history.

The Yukon's Premier, Darrell Pasloski, devoted much of a short speech to celebrating the past, present and future of mining in the territory, and wished everyone a fine weekend.

The Arts Festival ramped up at the Waterfront Park, with 13 demonstrations for young and old, as well as installations at various sites around town and 11 lectures and demonstrations as part of the Print and Publishing Symposium based in the old Dawson Daily News Building over Saturday and Sunday.

Across the river, the AFD Golf Tournament captured quite a few people.

The annual Natural and the Manufactured series presented a display of wallpaper patterns called "Migratory Patterns" at Ruby's Place, assembled by Kevin and Robert Yates, while Kathleen Ritter lectured on "The Sound of North" at the KIAC Ballroom.

Much of this activity continued over on to Sunday, with the addition of the popular Mud Bog in the North End and the addition of a Pecha Kucha evening to lead into the ODD Ball Closing Dance Party in the ballroom.

Breaking up with convention, one fight at a time

Photos By Michael MacLean Story By Diego Martin.

It's a rainy evening on Saturday, August 7, 2016. A wrestling ring, fenced in and surrounded by vendor trucks, stands strong in the middle of the Mud Bog site. The Mooshide Slide epically frames the scene. The crowd starts arriving in groups, entering the site by paying what they can, or climbing up the cliff to find a perfect viewpoint. There is excitement in the air; everyone is waiting for the Dawson City League Of Lady Wrestler's North End Knockout to begin.

Established in 2013, the annual showdown has quickly found its place in Dawson City's lineup of quintessential summer events. A mix of physical theatre, acrobatics, and performance art, the Dawson City League of Lady Wrestlers re-appropriates and reclaims female power. It does this by creating a space in which both caricatures of stereotypical female representation and anti-heteronormative characters fight for the coveted Golden Diva Cup and handcrafted champion's wrestling belt. As Aubyn O'Grady, A.K.A. Big Jody Mufferaw and LOLW founder points out:

"The world of professional wrestling is dominated by machismo and hyper masculine extremes. We feminize the wrestling ring by giving wrestlers complete control over the characters they play, by making up arbitrary storylines and titles (...) we enter the arena totally on our own terms, performing mostly for one another".

The audience is quickly challenged on preconceived notions of female fighting (mud, jello, oil, and wet t-shirts) usually intended to indulge the male gaze. Hysteria, moodiness, obsessivecompulsive behavior, anthropomorphism, right wing politics and religious delusion are just some of the "supersized" items on the menu. In this alternate world, female and genderqueer bodies are free to express their brightest and darkest sides in an unapologetic manner. Jen Bieber A.K.A. "Rot The Roadkill Werewolf" speaks to me about the collective's exercise in questioning patriarchal expectations of female power:

"In the normative world, sexiness and conventional beauty are used as an empowerment tool (...) Ugliness is our way of challenging those norms. It feels very powerful to move as a wolf, to make myself ugly, to be loud, to take space, and to be a center of attention in that way (...) I've never performed before so taking on an animal persona is extremely liberating. I don't have to speak. I get to be wild. There is no expectation for me to interact with anyone in any particular way"

The performers build characters and storylines upon their life experiences as cisgender or female-identifying beings, like wrestler Kimberly Edgar A.K.A. "Babydoll":

"Trying to be docile and pleasing is a persona that many femmes can relate to, I think. As a child, I was socialized to be pleasing, nice to look at, and not outspoken (not necessarily through my parents, but through school and society in general). I was also very trusting and easily manipulated as a young person. I think I drew upon that experience for my character (...) Performing Babydoll felt like a safe way I could express the unstableness I felt, while also not really being judged for it, because it is "theater". This summer also had me talking to many women/femmes about being controlled/ abused by a partner and that was floating around in my mind when I thought about asking my manager to be my "controlling husband".

Both in and out of the ring, the event is an immersive experience. You might encounter "The Lunch Lady" amongst the crowd trying to force feed you gluten-free, organic, locally sourced snacks; or "Janet Orial" the cleaning lady sweeping around your feet while you try to order a drink at the bar. From the insufferable TV star always followed by vicious paparazzi to a dredge pond siren with an entourage of "swamp kids", this art collective will make you feel like you're in a world that's part John Waters' movie, part Mexican "Lucha Libre". An Italian grandmother with a food binging problem could stop you and ask you to feed her. Reverend Annie Goodfellow and Donald J. Trump might walk past you followed by the secret service and an army of followers. The crowd drinks and heckles, holding hand made signs, while the characters duel to death in a Coliseum of their own (the ring is built and taken apart by the performers themselves). The losers, who are often victims of either their own vanity or the distraction provided by the prospect of success and recognition, roll off the wrestling mat to continue engaging with the audience.

From its early beginnings at the Hobo Mansion (an alternative living space/artist studio on Bonanza Road), the Dawson City League of Lady Wrestlers has gained a large and ever growing cult following, sprouting into sister leagues in Toronto, Montreal, and Victoria, and fostering the creation of a trans Canadian network of female and queer art collaboration. Their events have been covered countrywide by media outlets like CBC, VICE, The Star, The Huffington Post, and The Yukon News, amongst others. Founder and multidisciplinary artist Aubyn O'Grady illustrates: "The best thing about the growth of the LOLW across Canada is seeing how each new Sister League reflects the community that it is performed in. Elements of the community appear in the characters wrestlers take on, the location the event takes place, and the audience who engages with the show. We have collectively agreed not to tour our performances, so if a community wishes to host an event, they have to form their own League. There has definitely been a learning curve in figuring out how to respond to our growth and popularity in a way that unifies our message, but still allows each League room for individual expression, but I think we are figuring it out!"

With a bar service provided by volunteers, (proceeds going to the Dawson City Music Festival and Yukon Girls Rock Camp) this year's annual showdown not only presented a thought provoking show in an epic location, it also offered handcrafted local food, art, and live body painting. In the end, the audience, exhausted from yelling and laughing, finds their way off the site and heads to the Pit Lounge to attend the after party, where Toronto DJ "Mary Mack" inspires everyone to dance the night away. But it is no ordinary night at the Westminister Hotel—there is female power in the air. Everyone has connected a bit more with his, her, or their feminine power, be it quiet and submissive, loud and subversive, clean or filthy, stable or unstable.

Bookends: How Beavers shaped the Geography and History of North America

By Dan Davidson

Once They Were Hats: In Search of the Mighty Beaver By Frances Backhouse ECW Press 261 pages $18.95

There are a number of beaver lodges in the Klondike. One family has been known to create temporary difficulties along a branch of the Klondike River that meanders past Henderson Corner and Rock Creek. Other families are thought to be the cause of occasional outbreaks of "beaver fever" (Giardiasis) in some of the rural areas south of Dawson.

They're a chubby, somewhat comical little creature, often used in cartoonish ways to represent Canada, as in that annoying pizza commercial currently flooding evening television (beaver with tartan cape and hockey stick) or the recent cartoon demonstrating Canada's increased commitment to NATO (little beaver in combat gear hauling tiny toy cannon). Unless their activities have caused us some inconvenience, we don't tend to take them seriously.

Frances Backhouse says that much of what we refer to historically as the New World was once Beaverland, shaped and influenced by the activities of a creature that was more numerous and widespread than the fabled herds of bison about which we read so much in western lore. They occupied and influenced the landscape of every part of North America that was not desert, or too cold for them, or patrolled by alligators. "Wherever they could find water and wood, beavers were there."

Indeed, as the book moves on, we discover that beavers had quite a bit to do with the existence of both the water and the wood. It appears that they are Mother Nature's landscape artists, that their presence or absence can have a profound effect on an ecosystem.

Beavers go back a long way into history, and came in a variety of sizes over the millennia. Not all of them were dam and lodge builders like Castor canadensis. Not all are now, Some of them den under river banks for instance.

Backhouse begins by taking a number of trips into areas where the landscape is most like what it would have been when there were a lot fewer people on the continent and, having described those places, asks us to imagine much of the continent looking that way. Sure, the First Nations people trapped and used the beaver, but not to the extent that Europeans would when they got here.

While the Southern Hemisphere tended to be explored as the result of the search for mineral wealth,
North American exploration was driven by the fur trade, and beaver pelts were considered one of the prime commodities.

Chapter three details how the beaver was trapped nearly to extinction over just a few hundred years, as ever more efficient ways of catching them were developed and the European mania for hats made of beaver felt took hold.

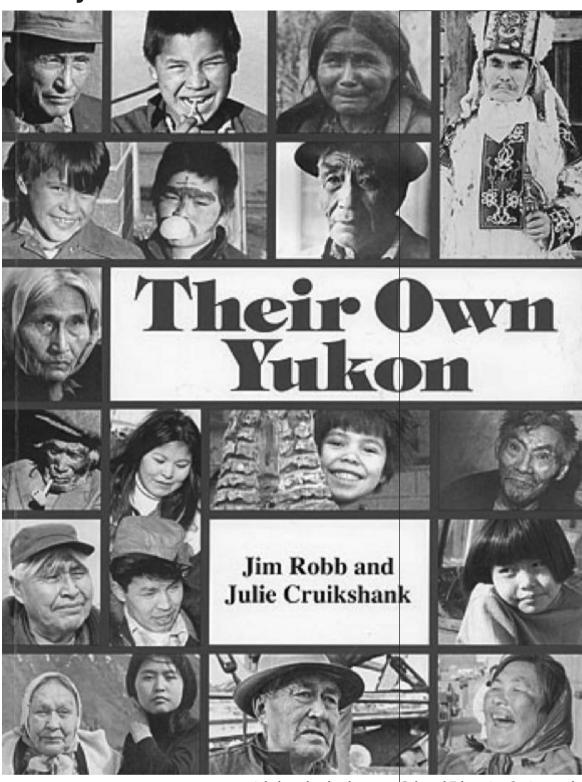

No tale of the return of the beaver would be complete without mention of the work of Archie Belaney, the transplanted Brit who fooled most of the word as Grey Owl. He was, perhaps, more of a convenient poster child for an existing moment, rather than quite the eco-hero that legend has made him, but his story remains of interest.

In connection with those hats, Backhouse spent time at the Smithbilt hat factory in Calgary, and visited the North American Fur Auction in Toronto, as well as actually learning how to skin a beaver under the tutelage of a professional trapper.

The book wraps up with some discussion of the beavers' impact on water tables, growth of peat bogs, development of wetlands which help to control forest fire hazards, and how their activity paves the way for diverse flora and fauna during and after their occupation of an area. She provides several examples of how beaver activity in certain areas has been controlled and shaped without having to kill them.

Frances Backhouse is perhaps best known to Yukon readers as the author of Women of the Klondike (Whitecap 1995) and Children of the Klondike (Whitecap 2010). The former was her first book length project, written after a number of years of shorter form journalism. The latter was the book she worked on during her stay at Berton House, in 2008. Both can be found on a lot of book racks in the territory's stores. Sadly, her 1999 book about hiking the Chilkoot Pass, Hiking with Ghosts (Raincoast) is out of print, but perhaps the buzz about this book will bring it back, or at least hasten that promised e-book version.

History Hunter: Their Own Yukon: a new and improved edition

By Michael Gates, Originally in The Yukon News, Friday July 22, 2016 Used with the author's permission

The Klondike Gold Rush should be remembered not only for the abundance of the yellow metal it produced, but for the wealth of images captured in silver. The camera had just come into its own and during the gold rush, many stampeders brought their pocket cameras with them.

Others brought more professional outfits and produced the iconic images that have defined the gold rush for all time: The long chain of men labouring up the Chilkoot Pass, the fleet of handmade scows, boats and rafts that floated down the lakes and rivers to reach Dawson City; the crowded streets of Dawson City and the mining of the nearby goldfields.

I quickly compiled a list of two dozen photographers who produced significant collections of photos of the era of the gold rush.

Photographers like E. A. Hegg and Frank LaRoche produced commercial photo books that capitalized on the insatiable demand for anything Klondike. Later photo books produced by Goetzman or Zaccarelli portray the stable community that Dawson became after the stampede had subsided.

More recent books like One Man's Gold Rush (photographs by Hegg), Klondike Lost (two goldfield photographers, the Kinsey brothers), The Last Grand Adventure (William Bronson) and Klondike Quest (compiled by Pierre Berton) place a more historical perspective upon the drama of the great stampede of a century before. These books are at once stirring, stimulating, fascinating and informative.

But First Nation people make either a scattered appearance, or do not appear at all in this colourful pictorial narrative of the Yukon in transition between the 19th and 20th centuries. Fortunately, First Nation people took their own photographs.

One ground-breaking book stands out. Originally published in 1975 by the Yukon Indian Cultural Education Society and the Yukon Native Brotherhood, Their Own Yukon, by Jim Robb and Julie Cruikshank, has just been reprinted by the Council of Yukon First Nations. Minor changes improved the new edition.

The original concept for this book was born in the fertile mind of renowned Yukon artist Jim Robb, who began discussing the idea of a picture book of First Nations life with many of his native acquaintances. They loaned him the photos and he compiled them into a history of their lives.

The project gained traction with the financial support of Whitehorse businessman Jack Needham, who had become acquainted with many First Nation families as a purser on the Yukon River steamboats in the old days.

Anthropologist Julie Cruikshank became involved through her own study in the late 1960's. One of her concerns was that while often studied, the result of this research was seldom shared with the communities. The photos
a framework within which some of that knowledge could be presented. In 1973, Robb asked Cruikshank to talk to the families concerned and help him to record the details surrounding the scenes depicted in the photographs.

According to the original preface to the book, the photos in this volume "present an alternate history, recorded by Indian people who experienced it.... In their photographs they isolated and recorded events in their daily lives which could never have been described as vividly in writing. Like their oral tradition, their pictures conveyed emotions through posture, gesture and facial expression as well as through the human story they tell."

The photographs are a rich portrayal of events of daily life and a wide variety of social occasions captured from a personal standpoint, rather than the detached view of an outside scholar.

The book, which contains 241 photos within its 180 pages, is broken into 11 chapters, with the first setting the context, and the second addressing the gold rush and its aftermath. The following 8 chapters group the photos into several categories (hunting, trapping, trade and trading posts, family life and death, women, social life riverboats and wood camps). The final chapter is an assemblage of contemporary photographs taken by Robb himself.

This book was a ground-breaking document testifying to First Nation life in the territory that had long been neglected in the conventional narratives. It exposed First Nation culture to the wider public, and brought the story back to the communities in a highly readable fashion. The original is one of the most evocative photo books in my library, and the new reprinted version takes its place beside the original edition on the bookshelf.

The book quickly went out of print and in recent years, copies were selling for several hundred dollars each. This year, the Council for Yukon First Nations decided to reprint this work more or less in its original form. As such, it retains the language and views of the time, and reflects the generosity of the individuals who shared their memories with Cruikshank and Robb.

There are some minor changes though, that make this edition an improvement over the original publication. Most noticeable is that the quality of the photographs has been greatly improved. They are sharper and the range of contrast enhanced. Murky images from the original volume, where much of the detail was hidden by heavy contrast, are now easy to discern.

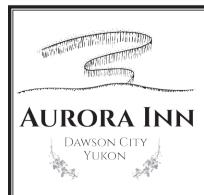

Names have been added to the images contained in the last chapter; something that was not done in the original edition. Where details of the faces were cropped on the original cover, on this one, they are framed to reveal the entire faces of the individuals, a subtle change that makes it more appealing without changing dramatically the form from the original edition.

There are three maps in the first chapter of the book. All quotations are footnoted, and there is a short bibliography on the last page.

This book reveals native life from an intimate, personal perspective. The introductory text for each chapter sets the stage for what follows within, and the captions supply details about the content of each photograph as provided by the numerous contributors to Cruikshank and Robb. "Their Own Yukon" put an intimate human face on First Nations people and started to fill in the long-overlooked chapter of Yukon history that continues to this day.

For anybody interested in Yukon First Nation history, this is an essential addition to your library. It was an excellent book when it first came out forty years ago, and is even better in the reprint edition.

Authors on Eighth Celebrated Klondike Writing

Story and Photos By Dan Davidson

This year's Authors on Eighth Walking Tour didn't set a record for numbers – as the event has seen up to 60 people crowded into the first venue at the Jack London Museum - but it did do something unusual in terms of numbers, holding steady at between 46 and 50 for all three stops.

The tour follows the Writers' Block from the Jack London Museum and Cabin to the Robert Service Cabin and finally to Pierre Berton's House, home of the writers' retreat named for Dawson's famous son.

"Writers' Block" is a bit of a literary joke, since all of the four writers celebrated on the tour were prolific in their lifetimes.

The London stop, hosted by chief interpreter, Dawne Mitchell, celebrated Jack London's short stay in the territory, along with his much longer literary reach. He wrote that he found himself in the Yukon, and it is certain that his stay here jump-started his career as a writer.

The museum also celebrates the work of long-time journalist and historian, the late Dick North, without whom the London Cabin would never have come to Dawson, and whose personal collection of London memorabilia was the starting point for the museum's displays.

The museum is operated by the Klondike Visitors Association, which partners with Parks Canada and the Writers' Trust of Canada, to put on this annual event.

At Park's Robert Service venue, young Emile Bouffard provided a spirited and humorous account of Service's life and times in the Yukon, making reference to some of the standard works, but reading several that were less well known.

Just across the street is Pierre Berton's boyhood home, purchased by the author in 1989 and refurbished by the Klondike Visitors Association. Operating since 1996, and now under the control of the Writers Trust of Canada, with the assistance of the KVA and the Dawson City Community Library, the home has been host to 76 visiting writers since it opened.

The audience for this part of the tour contained many more

The audience at the Jack London Museum.

Canadians than it has in recent years, and so there was less need to explain just who Pierre Berton was.

This summer's writer-inresidence, poet and editor, Claire Caldwell, read from her recent poetry collection, Invasive Species, and assisted in giving out the prizes for the annual writing contest, which she had helped to judge.

The theme for this year's contest was to link the Klondike with the First World War, an idea inspired by the Yukon and the First World War conference earlier this season.

The prose award went to Erika Rauguth for her short story, "Buried", inspired by local historian Michael Gates' History Hunter column about an incident during the war.

Long time Klondike Sun subscriber and annual contest participant Terry Hynes won the poetry award for "Klondike Joe", a poetic celebration of the life of Joseph Whiteside Boyle.

The winners, who were not present for the event, will be sent their prizes of books and gold nuggets.

Honourable mention went to two stories, "Lightflower" by Joshua Clark and "The Gravediggers Hands" by April White as well as a poem, Christmas in the Trenches" by someone writing under the name Barb-Wire Bill.

Following the awards and door prizes, Caldwell conducted a tour of the residence which, since it is a home, is only open to the public during this annual event.

Ease children back into the school year routine gradually. During the last two weeks of summer re-introduce a school year bedtime and start waking late sleepers earlier and earlier, closer to the hour that they'll need to rise when school begins.

Create a centralized calendar for all family members' schedules to track after school activities, lessons, and appointments. Colour coding entries by family member will help to keep multiple busy lives organized, arrange transportation and resolve potential conflicts in advance.

Plan before you shop. Take some time to assess each child's clothing needs before buying more. Ask the school for a classroom supply list and reuse any supplies that you already have.

We at Victoria Gold encourage you to 'think safety' to ensure that your children are well rested and prepared to begin the best school year ever

TWENTY YEARS AGO IN THE SUN

NOW EVERY SECOND FRIDAY

DAWSON CITY, YUKON

"THERE'S STILL GOLD IN THE KLONDIKE!"

VOL. 8 NO. 9

FRIDAY, AUGUST 23, 1996

The Gold rush Girls from Gerties turned out to meet the home town celebrity - and they weren't even PHOTO BY DAVE TRATTLES

Back to Life Comes Berton 1 louse

BY DAN DAVIDSON Sun Staff

ike all famous sons, Pierre Berton sometimes gets a mixed reception in his home town, but you'd never have known it to hear the spontaneous applause that broke out from the crowd of some 200 people as the tall man in the dark blue blazer strode out onto the balcony of his boyhood home on the evening of August 14. As KVA manager Denny Kobayashi put it, the crowd welcomed the Bertons, Pierre, his wife, Janet, and his sister Lucy Woodward, home.

For the Klondike Visitors Association and the Yukon Arts Council, the opening of the Berton Family Home was a triumph. This project has been in the works since 1989, when Pierre Berton invested $50,000 in the house and donated it to the YAC to operate as a base for a new writer in residence program.

As Pierre himself noted, this was a far cry from the $500 his father had paid for it in 1924 and even further from the $400 he'd been able to sell it for, after doubling its size, when the family moved south in 1932.

In addition to Berton's original investment, KVA treasurer Peter Jenkins revealed that the organization has invested some $97,000 in bringing the house up to a standard that could house a visiting author.

"But what we have is this wonderful restored home for the writer-in-residence program," said Jenkins. "Mr. Russell Smith will be the first ... and he will have, unlike the Berton family, running water, a bathroom - all kinds of neat things."

Not that there was no bathroom in the original, but as Lucy Berton Woodward told the story, it was reached by climbing down a ladder. One day, when she and Pierre were just toddlers, they were playing blind man's bluff in the kitchen when Pierre, a paper bag firmly over his head, unexpectedly joined his mother in the root cellar.

"My mother was startled to say the least, to have a small bundle landing at her feet and me peering over the edge saying, 'Pierre all

Mayor Art Webster welcomed everyone to the official opening of the newest addition to the famous authors block. Robert Service's cabin is across 8th Avenue above Berton House, and Jack London's cabin is just around the corner to the south.

"I want to thank Mr. Berton for his insistence that this be part of a writer in residence program, because it will keep not only Dawson on the map, but provide some inducement to our young people...to write more and perhaps we'll see more famous authors come from Dawson City."

Speaking on behalf of the Yukon Arts Council, Max Fraser congratulated the KVA on a job well done and explained some of the background to the program, which was designed several years ago by a working committee of Dawson and Whitehorse residents.

"Mr. Berton's original concept...was bring to professional Canadian writers to the north to experience a part of the country they might otherwise not experience, so their time here could infect their writing and show up as part of their literary production in the future."

Berton has donated not only the house, but a large quantity of books for it and a further $5,000 to be seed money for next year's program. This year's inaugural writer will be in Dawson for three months.

purpose," explained, "is to let them experience the north and to have a good place where they could focus and concentrate on their work. This could be the beginning of a long line of writers coming to the Yukon, learning about this place and writing some pretty neat stuff about the Yukon."

The first writer in residence is Russell Smith, who introduced himself to warm applause and much laughter from the audience.

"I'm the real Cheechako, I'm from Toronto and I've never been north. I used to joke...that I'd never go north of Bloor Street ... or west of the farthest subway stop...so for me this is just a huge gift. The greatest gift that you can give a writer is time, and in an era when much government funding is drying up it's the hardest thing to come by, for us. (This) gives me the opportunity to see a whole new place, plus giving me the time and tranquillity to write..."

John Gould, who has been pitching this project for a number of years, and proposed it to Berton in the first place, was a childhood school mate of the Berton children. and recalled some incidents, to the delight of the audience and the embarrassment of Pierre and Lucy.

On one occasion John, the Berton children and some others were playing doctor on the back porch. John was the patient, stretched out on a steamer trunk.

"They laid me out on that and pretended to operate on me. I don't know if Pierre was doing the operating...but the girls were the nurses. The next day I was sick. The day after that I was in the hospital having an operation for my appendix to be removed. I spent a month in the hospital."

John also recalled struggling to master the sport of cricket on the lawn there: "I never did...but we had lots of fun at this cabin years and years ago."

Lucy Woodward will be assisting the KVA by drawing up a garden plan for the landscaping as she recalls it from the early 1930s.

"It's terribly exciting to be back here," she said. "I haven't seen the inside of this house since we left in 1932 when I was - well, I won't tell you how old I

She recalled life without running water in the winter in Dawson, deliveries by the water wagon and removals by the honey wagon, but most of all she remembered the gardens.

Scots of the Yukon, Part 3: The Discoveries

Story by James McQuiston

Let's move on to the major discoveries made by men of Scottish descent, leading to the settlement of the Yukon Valley.

The McQuesten family is a branch of Clan Donald. Jack's family knew of their link to Clan Donald as proven by the fact that Chuck McQuesten, greatgrandnephew of Jack, served for many years as the North Pacific Commissioner of Clan Donald, USA. His region encompassed much of Jack's old stomping grounds.

Coincidentally, the first western preacher recorded in the Yukon River Valley was Reverend Robert McDonald, who served as chaplain for the Hudson's Bay Company. A major gold-mining creek that eventually empties into the Yukon River was named Preacher's Creek after Rev. McDonald, who first discovered gold in its waters "by the spoonful."

Reverend McDonald was born in 1829, son of a Scottish farmer and a Canadian First Nations mother, living near Fort Garry, Manitoba. He began his career as a teacher. In 1851 he was ordained, and began his life's work among the Gwich'in at Fort Yukon.

It was Jack McQuesten and Robert McDonald who first recorded the Native name for the Klondike River, which was, in fact, the Thron-deg. A French trader wrote the name down on an early map of the area, in a manner that seemed, instead, to spell it Clondike. It is my theory that this morphed into the name The Klondike, despite it not being the original name of this famous river.

Rev. McDonald almost certainly officiated at the wedding of Jack McQuesten and his wife, Kate. Jack and Kate were not the real given names of this couple that represented one of the very first marriages between a white western trader and a Native woman in this area. They remained married for life and had many children.

Jack came about his nickname when, as an inexperienced passenger, he climbed to the top of a mast to release the twisted sails of a ship caught in a severe Pacific Ocean storm. As he descended the mast he was dubbed Captain Jack, a name that stuck with him for life. Kate's Native name was Satejdenalno (sa-teg-de-nal-no). Jack called her Kate.

Robert McDonald and Jack McQuesten were not the only famous people from Clan Donald to make their mark on the Yukon. Pete McDonald brought the very first horses into the Yukon River Valley in the company of his partner John Campbell. Both Pete McDonald and John Campbell left the Yukon as millionaires.

How these and other men got into the Yukon Valley reveals even more Scottish influence. Many trappers and miners came into the valley by what has been referred to as the "backdoor," coming up the Mackenzie River through western Canada then taking smaller streams and portages to reach the Yukon River.

The Mackenzie River was named after a very famous Scot, Alexander Mackenzie, who discovered the river while on a mission to find the Northwest Passage to the Pacific Ocean.

Through his explorations, Mackenzie opened up northwestern Canada, providing eventual access to the Yukon River Valley, and on into Alaska. There still exists a rock on which this explorer, who had just finally reached the Pacific Ocean, wrote the words, "Alex Mackenzie, from Canada, by land, 22nd July 1793."

Alex was born in 1764 at Stornoway, on the Isle of Lewis, in the Hebrides of Scotland, and grew up in America, where his father brought him after his mother passed away. The waterway named for this man (the Mackenzie River) provided the best Canadian access into the Northwest, as well as into the Yukon River Valley.

The men who made the difficult trip through western Canada and into Alaska, to discover and supply fur-trading and gold-hunting lands, were known as voyageurs. One leader of the vovageurs was Colin Robertson, born in Perth, Scotland, in 1783. He immigrated to New York City, where he found work with the North West Company, one of the two principal trading companies in North America. By 1814, he was in the employ of the other top trading company, the Hudson's Bay Company, leading an expedition to reestablish this company in western Canada. His expenses were guaranteed by Thomas Douglas, 5th Lord Selkirk, of Scotland. Both Fort Douglas and Fort Selkirk were named for Thomas Douglas.

Robertson rebuilt Fort Douglas, which had been burned down by the rival North West Company. In 1821, the Hudson's Bay Company and the North West Company were united, and Colin Robertson became a "chief factor" in the new company, representing the backdoor pathway to the Yukon River Valley.

Jack McQuesten entered the Yukon Valley through this backdoor opened by Scottish involvement on both sides of the Atlantic. Jack had spent several years prospecting in the northwest United States and in southwest Canada, along with his brothers, cousins and father. When the other family members returned to the lower forty-eight, Jack partnered with the Irishman Mike Shannon, until he took a job as a voyageur hauling freight northward. He eventually traveled more than twice the distance across the Northwest as the famous Lewis and Clark Expedition. Jack had spent so long in the wilderness, in fact, that he missed the entire American Civil War, and did not hear about it until he met another Irishman, Al Mayo, who had just left service in that war to make his fortune in Canada.

Soon, Jack left his post as a voyageur to partner with Al Mayo, James McKniff, Arthur Harper and Fred Hart. McKniff was Scottish, and Harper and Hart were from Scottish families that had moved to County Antrim, Northern Ireland. This five-man team made their way into the Yukon River Valley via the Mackenzie River. They were encouraged to go there by another chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company, a Mr. McDougall, and also by a man that Jack called Sibistone, but was, in fact, Sir George Simpson, born in Dingwall, Scotland.

Simpson's story shows the heavy involvement of Scots in opening up the North. He was the great grandson of George Mackenzie, 2nd Laird of Gruinard, who was himself the grandson of George Mackenzie, 2nd Earl of Seaforth, in Scotland.

Simpson's father was a first cousin of Alexander Mackenzie's father-in-law. Simpson was hired by Andrew Colville, who was born in East Lothian, Scotland, and whose sister married Thomas Douglas, 5th Earl of Selkirk, the financier of the quest north.

Mackenzie, of course, discovered the main passageway into the Yukon River Valley, Simpson encouraged Jack McQuesten to explore the area, and Douglas financially guaranteed the explorations of Colin Robertson and other Scotsmen in this adventure. In addition, Alexander Mackenzie and Thomas Douglas, being blocked in their attempt to settle displaced Highland crofters on land in Canada by the Hudson's Bay Company, simply purchased enough shares in the company to have a controlling interest over its use of land.

It can easily be seen that the settlement of the Yukon Valley was not an accident, but rather a calculated, step-by-step effort, carried out by many men of Scottish descent.

McQuesten's first stop, upon entering the valley, was at Fort Yukon, established by Alexander Murray, also of the Hudson's Bay Company. Murray was one of the earliest Scotsmen to enter the Yukon. He hailed from Lanarkshire, Scotland.

Captain Jack records that his partner Arthur Harper was the first to discover gold along the Yukon River that would pay a daily wage. He also states that Thomas Boswell and John Fraser were the first to do any mining on the Stewart River.

The Stewart River, which empties into the Yukon, was discovered by the Scotsman Robert Campbell of the Hudson's Bay Company. He named the waterway after a close friend and assistant in the company, another Scot by the name of James Stewart. Campbell also established Fort Selkirk above the juncture of the Yukon River and the Pelly River.

Campbell was hired to carry on the exploration of John McLeod, who established the town of Dunvegan, in Alberta, Canada, named after his family's castle on the Isle of Skye, Scotland. The influence of the name is felt today in the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway, in the Dunvegan Provincial Park, located near where Jack McQuesten said he first heard of the Yukon, and in the name of the Dunvegan Formation, a geological area located in northwestern Alberta, northern British Columbia, and as far north as the Northwest Territories.

James Stewart played an important role in maintaining Fort Selkirk. The men were finally forced to abandon the post they had fought so hard to sustain, when Chilkat Indians, long-time rivals of the Hudson's Bay Company traders at Fort Selkirk, attacked it and destroyed it. Stewart went on to serve at Fort McPherson, near the mouth of the Mackenzie River, while Campbell retreated to Fort Simpson, also on the Mackenzie River.

The Fraser River, the longest river in British Columbia, is another important river in the trek north. It was named for Simon Fraser, who led an expedition on behalf of the North West Company almost to the mouth of the river. Both Alex Mackenzie and George Simpson later visited the river to determine its viability in further explorations of the Northwest.

As the years rolled by, the families of Stewart and Fraser intermarried and a descendant of these two families, Katie Fraser, an archivist at the Dawson City Museum, assisted me in my research. Laura Mann, another Scottish descendant, served as executive director of the Dawson City Museum upon my visit there.

The Mann family married into the McQuesten family. Jack's former home in California is currently owned by his descendant Kevin Mann. The apple has, at times, not fallen far from the tree where Yukon history is concerned.

Of course, the river most central to this report is the Yukon River. In 1845, while James Stewart literally held the fort at Selkirk, Robert Campbell explored the Pelly River downstream until he came upon a larger river flowing from the south. As he had done with the naming of Stewart River, he named this river the Lewes River, after the Scotsman John Lewes, his fellow traveler and friend. Campbell didn't know it yet but he had found the Yukon. Since Campbell didn't understand his great find, the river's discovery was claimed by another Scot by the name of James Bell, considered the first explorer to find the Yukon.

In 1846, Bell, another Hudson's Bay Company trader, asked the local Natives what they called the wide, silty river he had come upon. They answered, "Yukukakat", meaning "big river" or "great river." James Bell renamed the river the Youcon.

For the next several years, maps of this area showed the Youcon heading north into the Arctic Ocean. Another river seemed to flow from this vast country and empty into the Bering Sea near the old Russian town of St. Michael, located on the western coast of Alaska. The Russians called this the Kwikpak River. In 1866, the Kwikpak and Youcon were found to be one and the same, and were renamed the Yukon River as we know it today.

Author James McQuiston has long written on the history of Scotland, Northern Ireland and the Yukon River Valley (particularly concerning his relative, Captain Jack McQuesten). He is a Fellow with the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, and publisher of an e-magazine called Celtic Guide (www.celticguide. com). McQuesten has a few books to his credit and has been published in Highlander Magazine, as well as with many newspapers and websites. He has had unique, historical white papers accepted by two U.S. Presidential Libraries and Museums, and has worked to preserve the hidden history of many heroic Scotsmen.
