The Moccasins

The Moccasins
By Erika Rauguth

“Smile girls.” Mariana and Rosie smiled, looking like little twin “cupie” dolls, posing beside one corner of the steam ship’s enormous wheel.

Bob snapped the photo and looked over at me with a grin, and then his face turned to concern. “Maggie, you look absolutely green. Maybe you’d better go lie down in the cabin.”

I nodded mutely. Watching the swirling white waves just seemed to mirror my churning insides. I headed towards our little room. On the last leg of our trip down the Stewart River and dry land couldn’t come soon enough for me.

As I closed my eyes, I remembered my mother’s dismay at our announced intentions. “Mayo, Maggie? But where is that?” My mother had asked, tears in her eyes.

“It’s south of Dawson,” I had tried to explain, pointing to the little map that I found in the encyclopedia.

“How will you manage the girls by yourself? Will you have electricity in your house or water? Are there any decent people there?”

“Mother, Bob grew up there. It is hardly the ends of the earth.” I found my consolation edged with irritation. “You didn’t grill Harry this hard when he went to work on the Alaska Highway!” I reminded her, wishing my older brother was here now to back me up. “You showed his letters to everyone who came through the door, like it was some great adventure!”

Her face held a wordless expression that conveyed how much she disputed my logic. “It is no place for a young woman, Maggie, let alone a young mother with children. What kind of neighbours will you have in this place,” She sniffed. “No doubt you’ll be left to borrow your cup of sugar from drunken road builders and Natives!”

At that point, I realized that it was best that I leave before letting her see my own tears.

As I carefully unwrapped and cleaned the few pieces of china that had survived the barge trip, I heard an unexpected knock at the door. I cautiously opened it, not knowing anyone in town and being filled with the terrible images my mother had painted in her rants. I was surprised, however, to be greeted by the sight of a young

Native woman. Her raven black hair was pulled back in a long thick braid and her dark skin was clear and flawless. She had brown laughing eyes, and a wide, welcoming smile. She held a plate of what looked like a scones or biscuits. Peeking out from behind her were two little girls, with long, glossy braids like their mother’s.

“Hello, you must be Maggie,” she said. “I’m Annie Ellis. My husband George is workin’ with your hubby, eh? We’re just a few houses over.” She pointed behind her to a brightly painted, tidy shanty house with bright white wood siding.

I looked self-consciously around my little home, barely unpacked. “My house isn’t really up for company...,” I stuttered. My mother would die if she had seen me entertain a neighbour without having the Good Housekeeping seal of approval. I was tired of my own company, though, so I took a chance.

“Would you like to come in?” I asked.

She stepped inside, the two little figures following close behind. Taking off her heavy boots she pulled a pair of leather slippers rimmed with rabbit fur and slipped them on. Her little girls did the same. I had no place for them to lay their coats, but directed them to be placed over a large armchair. Mariana and Rosie, so happy to see other children, excitedly invited the other girls to see their new room with the wooden bunks that Bob had constructed.

I directed my guest to the small kitchen table. “I’m sorry that my house isn’t set up quite yet,” I confessed.

“North Vancouver”, I replied. “And you? Where are you from?”

Annie sipped her tea and then motioned in the direction of the river. “Right here. My people have been in this area for as long back as we can remember. My family’s all down at the Old Village but George and I like being here, since he’s workin’ for White Pass.”

I recalled that Bob has mentioned in passing that George Ellis was an Englishman. “How did you meet your husband?” I asked, hoping that it didn’t seem like I was prying.

She smiled broadly. “He’d just come up from Watson Lake, workin’ as an Engineer on the road project, eh. Well, I was workin’, selling jams and jellies and bannock to the White Pass guys, and he bought a jar of cranberry jelly from me every week, ‘til he asked me to marry him. Always said he fell in love at first sight, but I think he just wanted all the cooking to himself,” she laughed and I couldn’t help but join her. “How ‘bout you. How’d you meet your Bob?”

I told her about meeting Bob and then our quick marriage before he left for France and the war. How he didn’t meet our twin girls until the war was over, and how unhappy he had been in the city. “He missed it here,” I said, but perhaps somehow my voice betrayed my misgivings.

“It gets in your blood...that what my George says,” Annie replied. “‘Course, I wouldn’t know, havin’ been here my whole life, but George swears by it. The North just gets in your blood and you can’t stay away. You’re just not happy anywhere else.”

“Don’t worry, Mrs. Mather. The doctor will be back in no time.”

I woke up early one January morning to find that I was finally in labour. The doctor, however, had been called to Pelly Crossing to set a broken leg. The nurses sent me home to rest, assuring me that he was on his way.

I heard a knock at the door and then Annie let herself in. “Don’t get up. You’re supposed to be restin’,” she said. She went straight into the kitchen and put my kettle on the stove. Then she came back into the little sitting room and handed me a little package that had been tucked under her arm.

“Oh, Annie, you shouldn’t have...,” I said as I pulled back the paper to see the most beautiful pair of moccasins I had seen yet. The hide was soft and smooth, and each one bore an intricately beaded pink rose pattern. I slipped off my old bedroom slippers and slid my feet in between the soft layers of white rabbit fur. They fit perfectly.

Loppet tested brains as well as brawn

By Sebastian Jones,
KATTS Vice-President
Photos provided

It was perfect skiing weather on the Moose Mountain cross country ski trails on Sunday March 13th when 23 skiers ranging from the low single digits to late middle age gathered for the second annual KATTS Moose Mountain Ski Loppet.

Many of the participants wanted to know: What is a loppet anyway?

A Loppet is Norwegian for a mass participation ski event that includes several distances for racers and opportunities for all ages and abilities to participate. Often food and drink and costumes are integral parts of loppets, and ours was no exception.

To ensure we acknowledged brains as well as brawn, participants had to locate a skill testing question somewhere along their route and correctly answer it. Do you know who started the Jack Rabbit program in Canada? Which Dawsonite just won a gold ulu in Nuuk? Who coached Olympians from Old Crow and Fort McPherson?

To ensure we included beauties as well as beasts, participants were encouraged to dress up.

Three of the littlest people went 600m, reading the story of how Mr. McGee learned to ski along the trail, ending up at the MEC warm up hut in time for snacks and hot chocolate.

Ten people sprinted around the 1 km track, three went 2 km, four went 5 km and five went 8 km.

It was a lot of fun, nobody got injured and everybody got an edible medal!

Everyone earned a delicious cookie medal

Sadaam and his entourage even made it to the event

A roaring start to the 5 k

Uffish Thoughts: Daylight Saving Daze are here again

Story & Photo
By Dan Davidson

It's that time again. It's Saturday night as I begin this column, the night before we have to switch to Daylight Saving Time (DST) once again. It feels like we've hardly had time to get used to being on Standard Time, but here we go.

The actual official time change happens at 2 a.m., but no sane person is going to get up and wander around the house to do the deed at that hour. Like most of you, I've spent part of the evening changing the clocks around the house, starting with all the digital readouts on the various kitchen appliances. I could certainly wish that these devices were as convenient as the pods, pads and laptops which help us to be productive. These will all change automatically, sometime in the wee hours.

The appliances aren't that smart, but the microwave and the oven do need to show the time properly in order for their timers to work, so changing them is a necessity.

The trickiest part of this twice yearly ritual is changing the time on my several wristwatches. I suppose that the new smart watches probably change themselves, but my digital/analog don't. I have a couple that are just digital readouts, but the ones I prefer have numbers (digital) and hands (analog) and so there are two separate operations for each watch. No two devices seem to use exactly the same procedure to reset time and date, which adds to the chore.

While going through this ritual I am always moved to wonder why we bother. By the end of this week the weather app on my phone tells me that we will be looking at an even 12 hour split between day and night, and after that it just gets more extreme in favour of daylight.

Depending on your location between Watson Lake and Inuvik we are gaining up to six minutes a day of sunlight as we move into March, so the brief advantage of a longer evening on DST is eliminated in just over a week.

After that we're just lying to all those tourists who come north to see the Midnight Sun in the summer.

We've actually been on permanent Pacific Standard Time since 1975, as opposed to the Yukon Standard Time Zone we used before that year, so we're really on DST one-third of the year and then on Double Daylight Saving from March to November.

When folks swarm up to the Midnight Dome on June 20th (this year, due to Leap Year, but the 21st most years) to experience the miracle of the Summer Solstice, if they really want to see a Midnight Sun they need to be there at 2 a.m.

If you're thinking that this isn't your parents' Daylight Saving Time, you're right. The idea itself goes back to 1895 and it has been used at various times and in various places since then. The modern version seems to date to 1916, the middle of the World War One.

Until 2006, our time zone moved to DST on the first Sunday in April and back to Standard Time on the last Sunday in October. In 2005 the G.W. Bush administration in the USA changed the dates to the second Sunday in March and the first Sunday in November, the change to be effective in 2007. Canada followed suit, or actually led the march, with all those provinces that use the practice opting in between 2005 and 2007.

Saskatchewan claims not to observe DST, but it actually uses Central Time rather than the Mountain Time Zone it's located in, so it is actually like the Yukon in that respect, and could be said to be on permanent DST.

There are a lot of pros and cons to the practice. Outside, it's great for evening ball games and other outdoor activities, but it apparently plays merry hob with agricultural routines, particularly the diurnal cycles of farm animals.

Still, we've done it again. I'm finishing this on Sunday, and we managed not to be late for church this morning, so I guess we succeeded.

The Moccasins By Erika Rauguth

Annie sat with me for the afternoon, distracting me with stories about her adventures as a child along the banks of the Stewart River, and sharing some of the local stories of her people. At supper time, she headed back to her own home, taking Mariana and Rosie with her for the night. It was obvious that if it was indeed a race between my baby and the doctor, the doctor was falling behind.

I couldn't help, even in the stress of that night, laughing to myself at the thought of my mother's expression if she could have seen me, moccasin clad, pacing the floors in labour while a winter storm tried to beat down the walls of the little nursing station. By morning, however, my daughter had arrived, though the doctor would not put in an appearance until the following evening.

As time passed, I wore my moccasins daily. Although Annie and the other ladies of our unofficial arts and crafts group taught me how to do the traditional beading and construct moccasins, I cherished the pair that Annie had made for me. Her bead work was regarded as the best in the area and the work she did on my slippers received countless compliments.

The day I woke from a quick nap to find that the twin's puppy had chewed one side off of the left slipper, I began to sob. I gathered the pieces and rushed to Annie's. She and George were in the middle of packing for a trip north. George had taken a temporary job in Tuk and Annie wouldn't let him go without her and the girls.

She looked the moccasins over carefully, as if planning her attack. "It's ok," she said. "I'll fix 'em"

Two days later, I held back my tears as I hugged Annie tightly on the Mayo dock. "How will I survive without you!" I said.

"Ah, you're tough. You'll be ok," she replied, with a laugh. Holding up the moccasins, she reassured me. "And I'll get these back to you when I see you next."

*****

The steaming kitchen was sweet with the smells of cooking fruit and the jars of jam that I had placed near the window cast a dancing rose light on the wooden countertop. As I finished my last batch of cranberry jam, a pounding at the door pulled me from my thoughts.

I didn't expect it to be young Jase Neillson, and he looked grim. "You need to come, Mrs. Mather, there's been an accident."

I felt my stomach drop.

"Mom?" I turned. Mariana was standing in the kitchen doorway. She quickly read the distress on my face.

"Get your sisters and go next door," I barely uttered. "I have to go see your father."

All the years working on the river, Bob had never learned to swim. When I heard that he had become tangled and been dragged off the ferry, I feared the worst. But he had survived, with the steel cable snapping his leg like a dry alder. It would be a long, slow recovery, and even with all the savings we had, we finally gave in to my family's pleading and returned to the south.

I wrote to Annie as soon as I could, but months later, my letter came back encased in a note from Mabel McIntyre, the postmistress in Mayo, saying that the Ellis family had decided to stay north and that she didn't have a forwarding address.

Saddened, I tucked it into a box of keepsakes: the photos of Annie and I and the children walking in winter; with Julie in a pack-board on my back; of Mariana heading to school in her little parka and mukluks; and of my tiny shanty house along the Stewart River – all my wonderful memories- and tucked it away in my closet. As the years would pass by, I would pull it out many times, like a secret life that I had once had, and then return it to its resting place.

You can take the woman out of the north, but you can't take the north out of the woman. Julie had printed the inscription on a card she had made for my last birthday. She had found a photo of me with her as a baby, swaddled and sleeping and tied to my back, with my head turned, looking over at the camera. All the guests at my 50th birthday party had thought it was a hoot, but later on, I hung it on my wall and felt an emotion akin to homesickness wash over me. I missed those days.

So when Bob's proposed solution to being laid off was to move to the Yukon and build a highway lodge, I didn't object. He'd found a place south of Dawson, a nice spot near Moose Creek. Twenty years after our first adventure, we again sold everything we could, packed what we couldn't live without, and headed north.

The twins were married now; Mariana was overseas and Rosie lived in Alberta. And Julie – well, she pulled up stakes and came with us. She said it was because we would need the help, but I suspect that she had a craving for adventure. After all, she had been born there, and there was little doubt that the north was in her blood.

It was back-breaking work. We cleared the land and cut the trees, with the help of a few young men that Bob hired for the season. However, in no time at all, as soon as the roof was on, the lodge was open for business. Word got around and we had no shortage of customers or company. Julie and I were run off our feet from dawn every day, baking and serving meals. Even Bob worked in the kitchen from time to time, baking bread like he had when he was young in his parent's café in Dawson.

But even through the business and the work, when I could I would find time to sneak out for walks through the lush pine forest and sit and just watch the rushing creek. I'd carry a plastic bucket in case I found a nice spot to gather low bush cranberries, or stumble upon a bush of ripe rosehips. Listening to the call of the raven and the twitter conversation of squirrels, I would feel my soul relax, like I had once again come home.

"Mom, there is someone here to see you!" Julie called to me. I was just returning from a wander in the nearby forest, and stopped to pull off my muddy gumboots just outside the back door. As I stepped inside, I noticed a figure sitting at the large table. I recognized the long thick braid, now woven with silver strands.

"Annie?" I said quietly for a moment. The figure turned around, and I was greeted by a familiar smile and dark, twinkling eyes. "Annie!" I practically shrieked and raced over to hug her. Annie's light laugh floated in the warm kitchen air. "Maggie, how'd you get so old!"

"Me?" I smiled so broadly that my face hurt. "You're the old one."

The eighteen years that we had been apart seemed to melt away and we spent the afternoon gossiping and laughing and filling each other in on the stories of our lives. She showed me snapshots of her grandbabies, and I shared my pictures of Mariana and Rosie's families. It was like no time had passed at all.

"Well, I'd best get goin'," she said, nodding towards George, who had been graciously letting Bob give him the whole tour and story of our project. She reached for her purse. "Oh, I almost forgot." She reached in and pulled out an item wrapped in brown paper and handed it to me.

I slipped the paper off to find my moccasins. The damaged side had been replaced and they had been cleaned and stitched. They were just like I remembered them. "Oh, Annie, you still had them!"

She laughed. "Of course, of course. I figured I'd just give them to you the next time I saw you."

I was incredulous. "How could you know I'd come back?"

She smiled. "The north's in your blood," she said with certainty. "I knew you wouldn't be able to stay away."

More Vendor Stalls are needed on Front Street

Story & Photo
By Dan Davidson

The availability of street vendor stalls at the Farmer's Market along Front Street consumed about half of the hour and fourteen minutes of the March 8 meeting of Dawson's town council.

The Saturday market is a summertime (May to September) fixture along Front Street and this year it appears there are going to need to be more than the usual eight stalls.

The trigger that brought nine citizens to swell the normally sparse gallery at the council meeting was the fact that all eight of those stalls had been rented out well before noon on the morning, earlier in the week, when they were made available.

That meant that some people, who have been mainstays of the market for years, didn't get a spot.

Joe Cooke, of Happy Marmot Landscaping, was the first to speak in delegations, buttressed by a letter of support from the Chamber of Commerce, a petition signed by about 160 citizens, and collection of articles and information on the importance of encouraging local produce.

His argument was not simply that his new farming project needed an outlet, but that there needed to be more vendor stalls to accommodate the need of both the vendors and the buying public.

Sherry Masters has been selling Tupperware in her stall for a last several years and has thousands of dollars of inventory in stock that she needs a spot to market from. She's tried setting up on Fridays, but without being grouped in with the agricultural produce, the draw for customers just isn't there.

The farmers, on the other hand, just want the one day, because they're busy farming the rest of the time. Katie and Derrick Hastings were also left without a spot for their goods.

Council was open to discussing alternatives and on learning that the 2013 amendment to the original bylaw did not specify eight stalls, although the original did, the discussion moved to how more stalls might be accommodated without disrupting other activities, such as the paraglider's landing strip.

Within the space that is available, there is also an Artisans' Market that takes place on Saturdays in the picnic shelter next to the area where the open air vendor stalls are located. There was general agreement that many of the goods on sale there actually do need shelter in the event of rain.

Part of the problem this year seems to have been created by new city staff, who weren't familiar with the process, allowing some people to confirm their space over the phone or by email instead of having everyone appear in person.

City Manager André Larabie indicated that he was prepared to hold a meeting with interested parties within the next few weeks to work on possible solutions, including temporary reconfigurations of the area for the coming season, as well as longer term planning to improve the situation in later years.

Plunkett wanted to see the iconic North

By Dan Davidson

Shelagh Plunkett is the latest writer-in-residence at Berton House, and drawing to the end of her three month stay in the community. She will be wrapping up her Yukon visit with a public reading at the Dawson Community Library on March 29 and the Whitehorse Public Library on March 31.

Plunkett has been to the Yukon once some years ago, on a route that took her to Haines Junction, Haines and down the Alaska Marine Highway to Prince Rupert and across British Columbia, but Dawson had not been part of her trip.

"I thought this would be three months of peace and quiet and uninterrupted time," she said, ruefully admitting that the project she thought she'd finish is only partly done. Like many other writers, whose reflections are in the cumulative journal each leaves behind, she found other things to write about once she was here.

"That it was in the North was important to me. I've been in a lot of places all around the world, but I've never been in the North."

Plunkett's peripatetic engineer father (who may have been a spy) had the family bouncing back and forth from Vancouver to Guyana during her elementary school years, back to Vancouver for junior high, then to Timor for the rest of it, and back to Vancouver for high school.

She wrote about all this in her memoir The Water Here is Never Blue.

As a practicing journalist, wordsmith and editor, she's been to Africa, lots of the far East, Australia, all over, really. Montreal is now her home.

"I think of the North as being so iconic in the Canadian identity. So many people in other parts of the world, when they think about what is Canadian, they think of scenes like this."

Plunkett will discuss this and talk about her book at her public readings.

Alexander McDonald Lodge continuing care facility opened in Dawson

DAWSON (March 18, 2016)—The Government of Yukon today officially opened the new Alexander McDonald Lodge continuing care facility in Dawson.

"The Government of Yukon strives to ensure that Yukoners who require assistance with daily living have access to the quality care they need," Premier Darrell Pasloski said. "The people who built this territory deserve no less. We made a commitment to build a new and expanded McDonald Lodge, and we are here today because we kept that promise."

The new facility can accommodate 15 residents and replaces the previous lodge, which opened in 1970. It will provide assistance to individuals requiring a higher level of daily care than can be provided for in their home.

The new lodge is located next to the Dawson City Community Hospital, which allows the two locations to share some common supports, including an emergency back-up generator and food services.

"This collaborative arrangement with the Yukon Hospital Corporation is a great example of Yukoners working together to provide a high level of service in a fiscally responsible manner," Minister of Health and Social Services Mike Nixon said.

Construction of the new facility was announced in

Ham Dogs Win the Saito Cup

By Paul Robitaille

The Dawson City Curling Club hosted the 4th annual Akio Saito Cup, March 12, to decide the league champions for the year. 18 mixed teams participated in the event, which had a particularly festive atmosphere to it. In the end, it was the Ham Dogs, skipped by Paul Robitaille (Lead: Jaimee Gilson, Second: Jemmy Laurin, Third: Connie Reimer), that took home the prize, beating Fraser 1, skipped by Ian Fraser (Lead: Brenda Warren, Second: Chuck Barber, Third: Bonnie Barber).

Robitaille's rink fell behind 4-0 in the first two ends, but proceeded to battle back; scoring a double and stealing one more in the 3rd and 4th ends. A hit by Fraser in 5th end, led to a single for the Fraser and a two point lead.

The final end saw a ton of stones in play and with the last stone, Robitaille drew to the eight foot, scoring three, and winning the game. Following the game, Robitaille said: "Ian Fraser was shooting darts out there, and we were lucky enough to have an opportunity to score points when it mattered most." This was a back-to-back victory for the Ham Dogs, and their third victory in the four years of the event.

The Akio Saito Cup was a single knockout format tournament, and ran over the course of one day. The club was a-buzz with players and supporters well into the night. A turkey shoot occurred during the pizza dinner, with winner Ricky Mawunganidze drawing to the button on

By any measure, the KVA had a good year in 2015

Story & Photos
By Dan Davidson

One thing to remember about the Klondike Visitors Association (KVA) is that it is a not for profit organization. As executive director Gary Parker reminded everyone in his report, in the 37 years of its existence, the KVA "has averaged only $32,729 in net operating revenue per year."

The graph he provided to go with this assessment looks like a bouncing ball. More years than not the ball bounces under the break even line, the lowest revenue having been -$207,347 in 2010, and the highest having been +$296,957 in 1995.

In 2014 the losses were moderate, with a bottom line of -$16,362.

2015 was a much better year.

"After year end audit adjustments," Parker wrote, "we booked in 'audit speak' an excess of revenue over expenditures of $185,686 on approximately $3 million in operating revenues."

That is several orders of magnitude better than the year before, but that's not all free money to play with. The association is required to build up a couple of reserve funds. $50,000 goes into one such fund and another $50,000 into a slot machine replacement reserve. Happily, that second reserve also receives an equal Yukon Government contribution.

The association met at Diamond Tooth Gerties for its annual general meeting on the evening of March 10, with an eventual attendance of just over 30 people.

Acting chair Mark Mather opened the meeting by saying the organization had had a very good year in 2015, and the numbers bear that out.

The KVA paid out $1,340,000 in wages and benefits in the community, and spent $370,000 on local contracts. The 25% slot machine payment to the government was $310,000, while money spent on marketing, events and attractions totaled $270,000.

Aside from the casino, the KVA operates the Jack London Museum, Free Claim #6, the Trek Over the Top, Thaw di Gras, the Yukon Gold Panning Championships, the Dawson segment of the Yukon Culinary Festival, the Authors on Eighth Literary Walking Tour and Writing Contest, Discovery Days and the Great Klondike International Outhouse Race.

In addition the KVA hosted last spring's Tourism Association of the Yukon Conference, assists with the Commissioner's Ball annually and has partnered with CFYT-fm for its Talent Night, helped with the annual Haunted House event on Hallowe'en, and participated in the Great Klondike Gingerbread House Decorating Contest just before Christmas.

Treasurer David Rohatensky delivered a financial report that was really more of a pep talk to remind members what the organization existed for. The KVA is a destination marketing organization, he said, and while it doesn't always make a profit as it did this year, it doesn't exist for that purpose. In order to meet its financial obligations, it is run in a business like manner, but it exists to do good things for Dawson, and it is his contention that it does just that.

The administration and board always present a draft budget at the AGM but it is not voted on or adopted there. By practice, that chore is left to the incoming board, of which half the members will be completing two year terms while the other half will be starting theirs.

Put in a nutshell, the draft budget predicts taking in $3 million and spending about $2.9 million.

Elections were not difficult this year, Five people ran for the four vacant positions, with three of the members who had just ended their terms – David Rohatensky, Peggy Amendola and Dianne Brooks - being reelected. The new board member is Susan Blower Lancaster. Continuing members are Brian Stethem, Mark Mather, Paul Wettstein and Philippe Bartholomeus.

Treasurer David Rohatensky announced that he had reached the end of the time when the bylaws permitted him to hold that post, so someone else will be selected when the new board assigns positions after its first meeting.

More surprising to those not heavily involved with the organization was the news that Gary Parker will be stepping down as executive director in June, ending his eight year run in that position.

The Yukon Government also profits from the KVA's Success

The Yukon government has a stake in the success of Diamond Tooth Gerties. It gets an annual cheque based on 25% of the profits from the slot machines. To underline this fact the Klondike Visitors Association decided some years ago to adopt the practice of presenting one of those BIG CHEQUES to whatever member of the Tourism and Culture bureaucracy made an appearance at the KVA's annual general meeting.

It is a BIG cheque too, more than just in physical size. It's generally in the vicinity of a quarter million dollars. In 2014 it was $277,841.80; in 2015 it was $269,248.00.

It took some years for the message to get through, but in 2014 the government acknowledged that everyone who profits from the existence of the slot machines should contribute to keeping them competitive in the tourism market. An investment of $1,105,401 was added to a KVA investment of $150,000 to replace machines that were so old they had been described in several annual reports as having inadvertently become historic artifacts.

Part of the deal reached for this funding was that both partners would henceforth set aside $50,000 annually to make up a Slot Reserve Fund, recognizing that in five to eight years, the way technology ramps up its planned obsolescence, it will be necessary to replace the currently new machines.

So this year's BIG CHEQUE, added $50,000 to the slot revenue percentage of $254,022 to make a total of $304,022.

KVA directors Paul Wettstein, Mark Mather and David Rohatensky presented the cheque to the Deputy Minister of Tourism and Culture, Murray Arsenault.

Wild Ponies deliver tunes at the Alchemy Cafe

By Dan Davidson

Wild Ponies, consisting of the husband and wife duo of Doug and Telisha Williams, filled the Alchemy Café with good sounds on the evening of March 10. This another in a series of house concerts that have been helping Dawsonites cope with winter this year. Most of them have been in actual houses, but a few each year migrate to other venues.

Starting in Whitehorse on March 1, the pair spent a hectic 13 days playing gigs in Atlin, Crag Lake, Mendenhall, Haines Junction, Faro, Mayo, Dawson City, Old Crow and Inuvik.

By Dawson, Telisha was on antibiotics for a nasty case of strep throat, but was recovering enough to handle most of the vocals in their two sets.

As often seems to be the case, a group that sounds a little more country tinged when in the studio and joined by an eight piece band on their Things That Used to Shine CD, the Williams come across in a variety of different styles, more of a folk/rock/blues/bluegrass mix when they are live.

Doug Williams is a strong vocal presence and capable of coaxing a variety of rhythms and leads from his Gibson. The Yukon's dryness was playing games with his tunings as an instrument used to Virginia coped with the north.

Telisha played an impressive stand-up double base, an instrument that provided the pair's own encore performance when she took it apart and stored most of it inside itself, reducing it to a size more suited for highway and road travel.

"It's not as cold as I thought it would be," Doug said.

"It's more beautiful than I expected," Telisha added. "I didn't realize there would be so many mountains."

EMERGENCY FOSTER HOMES NEEDED

We can't always predict when children will need a safe place so Health and Social Services is seeking emergency foster homes.

These homes provide safe accommodations for children for periods of:

- ▶ A night or two;
- ▶ A weekend; or
- ▶ Up to 2 weeks.

You can be a renter or home owner — the important part is that you have a bedroom to spare. Just like long-term foster homes, emergency foster homes have to be approved.

It's almost Spring Greetings!!

By Mo Caley-Verdonk

Your Inspired Living Coach

It's such a special time of year here in the North as the sun shines brightly in the sky and the snow crystals sparkle. As the temperatures climb, there is also the smell of spring -- fresh willow bark for instance-- in the air. And today for the first time since September, we had the sunlight shining into our house. Being tuned into the present allows me to notice and appreciate these simple and spectacular moments. What are you tuned into?

You might wonder, "What's all this buzz about mindfulness?" You might even be telling yourself "It's a lot of work and I really don't have time for this." Don't worry, you're not alone!

It wasn't even all that long ago that health experts considered the mind and body to be pretty much unrelated. Not so much anymore, however. Over the past few decades there has been sufficient attention and resources spent in trying to understand how our physical and mental realms work together.

According to experts, becoming more mindful can impact many areas of your life including your mood, habits, peace of mind, how you interact with others, how you perform in your workplace or physical activities, how you spend money and so much more. This is super exciting and important.

To be more mindful means to be more aware -- more tuned into -- and accepting of your thoughts, feelings and actions in the present moment. But too often, mostly out of habit, we simply go through life doing things mechanically, or mindlessly. I refer this to as "automatic living."

Have you ever driven by your street turn or eaten something and couldn't remember if you did, or gone into a room to get something and left without it? These are all acts of automatic living or mindlessness.

No, we're not losing our minds, or getting old. It's just that our minds are so filled with 'noises' of the day that doing things without thinking about them seems to save energy for the things that require extra thought and effort.

What if it were possible to learn new skills with ease, skills that allow you to cultivate a radically different way of working with your mind?

Because of my own success with learning and practicing mindfulness, I've developed programs, and have seen over and over again how it liberates busy women from the burden of low mood, stress and exhaustion. I've seen the extraordinary consequences of their discovery that there is a way to live life more fully than they ever imagined. To learn more about how I help, give me a call or send me an email.

Furthermore, studies have shown that by clearing your mind, focusing on one thing at a time, and creating a habit of being in the present moment at all times will dramatically increase your energy, health, mood, well-being, and overall enjoyment of life. More specifically you'll:

- gain back control of your attention,
- recognize and reduce the harsh critical voice of self-judgment,
- reduce the tendency to worry and brood about everything,
- wake up to the small beauties and pleasures of the world,
- learn to respond wisely and compassionately to the people and events that affect you.

Aside from these powerful benefits, being mindful or 'in the present moment' awakens you to many things you otherwise would miss as you go throughout your busy day.

Hot Tip!

To heighten your level of mindfulness, try bringing awareness to routine activities.

It's important to bring mindful practice to our everyday lives -- it's not meant to be a burden -- it's a simple way to help you live more fully.

HOW:

• Choose one routine activity (brushing your teeth, washing dishes, cutting vegetables, getting dressed, leaving the house, making lunch...) that you do every day and commit to yourself that you will bring to it, as best you can a fresh quality of deliberate moment -to -moment awareness.

• To keep track of your practice make a note of your practice and then put a check mark every day when you remember to be mindful of this activity.

Please let me know if you have any questions about the activity, or if you'd like to share your successes and challenges. I am here to support you.

To Your Success.

NEW MONEY / The new $40-million Brewery Creek project will mean an economic and employment boom for Dawson.

BY TIMOTHY SAWA

Paul Saxton maneuvers his vehicle across three lanes of heavy traffic and wedges himself between two other cars in a fourth and much quicker lane. Now he's barreling safely along with the rest of Vancouver's impatient travellers en route to the airport — in the fast lane — right where he likes it.

This 49-year-old mining executive handles his vehicle much like he handles his career. He is driven by the excitement of a new and challenging project, and, in the past, when things got too comfortable at work, he'd simply move on, or change to a faster lane.

"I enjoyed Viceroy," Saxton says, referring to one of the many mining companies he's had the opportunity to work with over the last 30 years.

"We were in the process of building a mine and expanding and looking at some other things," he adds. "But I guess what happened was everything was going well and I just wanted a little more action."

ACCORDING TO KLONDIKE Visitors Association manager

Denny Kobayashi, Dawson City is well on its way to becoming the Snowmobile Capital of the Yukon. Kobayashi made this announcement during the first weekend of the recently completed Trek Over the Top in front of hundreds of people at Diamond Tooth Gertie's. Noting the growth in visiting snowmobile traffic here over the last four years, Kobayashi said he had researched the methods involved in getting a "capital" designation. While there was a

The Sun obtained funding in late 2009 from the City of Dawson, YTG's Heritage Branch and the Community Development Fund to conserve and archive early issues and make them available once again in the public domain. This is a great resource for students, writers and historians, and also for prospective tourists with an interest in Dawson City's life. Each month, we are re-printing our front pages from 20 years ago as a souvenir of our lively history. If you want to see page 2 and beyond, check out our website. Past issues are available there for download. Go to <http://klondikesun.com>. More will be added periodically (heh) when we have time!

In 1996, we became a bi-weekly. Should 20 Years Ago be a feature of every issue of the Sun from now on? Let us know.

History Hunter: The quilt of many names

By Michael Gates, The Yukon News, Friday February 5, 2016

Used with the author's permission

Some objects have symbolic and emotional value that is far more powerful than their physical nature.

Such is the case with a quilt, which I had the privilege of viewing last Monday. The quilt, object number 72.1.39f, and information about its origins and content, were bought out for me to examine by Colleen Dirmeitis of the MacBride Museum.

The quilt is made of plain and serviceable white cloth. It is slightly faded, wrinkled and smudged. There is a stain that appears as though coffee or tea may have been spilled upon it at some time in the distant past.

One side consists of 316 small squares of coarse white cloth sewn together. Turn it over, and you will find a large red cross stitched into the fabric that runs the entire length of 231 centimetres and across the width of 190 centimetres. There are 192 more cloth squares on this side that fill the four quadrants formed by the cross.

Sewn on each square, in red thread, is a name. There are 506 in all. Most of the names are written diagonally, although the names in the squares around its perimeter run perpendicular to the length of the quilt.

The pattern created by the placement of these autographed squares was purposeful and symmetrical.

Despite its modest construction, it is an object of great power and contains many memories from a little-known, but important part of Yukon history that was at once both noble yet tragic.

It was created by devotion to duty and the nimble fingers of the Martha Munger Black chapter of the IODE (Imperial Order, Daughters of the Empire) in Dawson City. Its creation began in October of 1916 when several yards of material were given to Martha Black, wife of Commissioner George Black, before she left Dawson City with her husband. He and 90 other men were going to volunteer to fight in the war raging in Europe.

On board the steamer Casca, as it laboured upriver to Whitehorse, many of the men helped Mrs. Black tear the fabric into small squares, which they signed. The autographed squares were sent back to Dawson, where the ladies of the IODE tirelessly sewed over the names with red thread, then carefully stitched them together with blue and white cross-stitches.

The work of sewing in the autographs and stitching together of the squares took the ladies, who were constantly organizing fund-raising events for the war effort, 18 months to complete. By March of 1918, the quilt was ready to be raffled off. A thousand tickets were sold at 25 cents each, to people from as far away as New Zealand; a quarter of them were purchased by the volunteers, with Mrs. Black buying a large number of the tickets herself.

The draw was made the evening of March 15 during a patriotic bonspiel at the Dawson Amateur Athletic Association building. Little Mary Ross, the daughter of Reverend and Mrs. Ross, drew the ticket. The winning number was 173, and the lucky ticket-holder was .... Mrs. George Black. The quilt was bundled up and quickly mailed off to Mrs. Black in London, England.

She kept the quilt with her for many years, finally giving it to her son Lyman, when he married in 1930. Lyman died in a car accident in 1937, and presumably, sometime after that, it was returned to his mother. It appears that it later came into the possession of the IODE again, and from them to the museum.

George and Martha Black's names appear on the quilt in a large square, right in the centre. Joe Boyle's name is on the quilt too, as is that of Robert Service. Boyle and Service were too old to be accepted into the army, but Service volunteered for the American Ambulance Service, which inspired him to write a best-selling book of poetry about the war. Boyle volunteered to go to Russia during the tumultuous times of the Russian Revolution. He became a national hero in Romania and was awarded medals by four nations, though not by his native Canada. Also sewn onto a square is the name of Jim Christie, who in 1909, fought hand to hand with a grizzly bear, and survived the attack to become a war hero.

Frank Berton signed a square. After the war, he returned to the Yukon and fathered Pierre, who became one of the most prominent Canadian authors of the twentieth century.

There are four nurses named on the quilt. One, Marie Thompson, was the daughter of a doctor practising in Dawson City. She was 29 years of age when she enlisted in London, in 1916, and had already been in France for the American Ambulance Corps for eight months, where she has been in charge of a ward. While not actively engaged in combat, she would have seen the horrifying effects of bullets, shrapnel and gas.

Jimmy Matthews was a student of the Dawson high school when he enlisted, having just turned 16 years of age. Only 159 centimetres in height, he had to stand up one step in order to be shoulder to shoulder with his taller classmates when they were photographed in front of the school. When he reached Victoria, he was almost rejected by the army on account of vision problems. But George Black arranged for a surgeon to operate on his eyes and correct the condition. Matthews suffered a head wound August 28, 1918, and was admitted to hospital near Etaples, France.

Morris Anthony caught a sniper's bullet to the throat near Vimy in 1917. He recovered, but his war was over, and he was sent home.

More than 30 names on the quilt were fatalities. Hugh MacDonald, son of a First Nation mother and a missionary father, died in February of 1919. Angus McKellar was a former Mountie who came to the Yukon before the gold rush. Charlie O'Brien, the son of Dawson City brewery king Thomas W. O'Brien, joined up fresh out of high school. Both were killed on August 10, 1918, when a shell hit their armoured car.

These were people who were committed to duty in the service of their country. Many of them were wounded; some never came back to the Yukon, while others remain buried in the cemeteries of France and Belgium. By this quilt we remember them all.

Colleen Dirmeitis, left, and Rose Mary Fordyce of the MacBride Museum hold up a quilt upon which are stitched the names of more than 500 men and women who volunteered for service during World War I.

Michael Gates is a Yukon historian and sometimes adventurer based in Whitehorse. He was one of the founders of this paper. He is currently writing a book on the Yukon in World War I. You can contact him at msgates@northwestel.net

Yukon Films on Screen at the Dawson Film Fest!

By Dan Sokolowski

The 2016 edition of the Dawson City International Short Film Festival is proud to present the greatest amount of Yukon-made content in its 17-year history. Bracketing the weekend's eclectic mix of films from near and far, the Festival starts with an all-Yukon double feature on Thursday and wraps with a Dawson-made web series on Sunday.

Opening night kicks off with The Memory Trap: The Herd That Wouldn't Disappear, Alan Code's film about the 40 Mile caribou herd. Next up is Daniel Janke's reworking the 1923 motion picture The Grubstake, Nell Shipman's film about a young woman who goes north to the Klondike to seek her fortune. Other local highlights Reuben Ward's Everybody Knows Me

(winner of Best Film at the 2016 Dead North Film Festival in Yellowknife); and Lulu Keating's two-part web series Broke Down Dawson Town (Episode 1 screens Friday night and Episode 2 closes Sunday evening).

Numerous other Yukon and local works appear in screenings throughout the weekend, and a burlesque performance by Chevonne of the Yukon sets the tone for the late show on Saturday night.

For those seeking maximum screen time, the fourth Cold Cuts Video Festival runs in the Yukon SOVA Gallery all weekend, with an opening reception at 4 p.m. on Friday the 24th.

Enjoy the Festival's popular First Eyes screening of films made by indigenous filmmakers, once again held at the Dänojà Zho Cultural Centre on Saturday afternoon.

Guest filmmakers round out the festival with inspiring face-to-face workshops throughout the weekend. This year's presenters are Mike Maryniuk (Winnipeg), Brianne Nord-Stewart and Brenda Matthews (Vancouver), and current filmmakers-in-residence Gail Noonan (Mayne Island) and Sam Decoste (Halifax).

If you need to stretch your legs, join us at the Sunday Street Feast for plates of perogies homemade by a team of intrepid volunteers, plus live music by CORN! For all the details check out the website at www.dawsonfilmfest.com.
